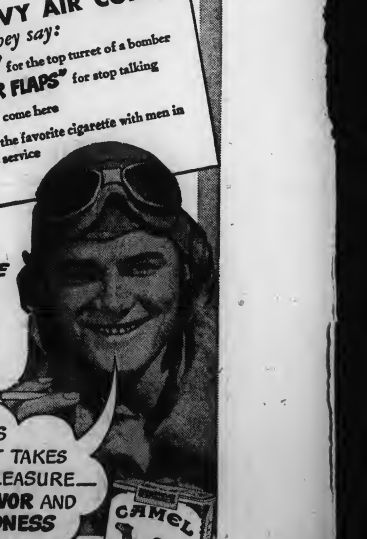
The band is then applied tightly and immediately loosened slightly about one-quarter of a turn. Bands must fit loosely during the processing or cooking. If an open kettle is used, the bands are to be screwed tight as soon as the jar is filled. After the processing is completed the bands are screwed tight to complete the seal. The bands may be removed twelve hours after the canning operation. At no time should the filled jars be turned up-side-down.

The housewife who takes no chances on variance from any one of these simple but important steps is assured of success and the enjoyment of the delicious flavor of home canned foods this winter.—Adv.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

At a Navy yard, 3000 workers travel daily 60 to 85 miles round trip by automobile—a good reason why war workers must have tires.

Tire users now restricted because of the rubber shortage will have de luxe road traveling conditions open to them in post-war days if State and Federal highway plans materialize. Already twelve States have approved building express highways of tomorrow when peace comes. Seven others are considering such plans.



A truck tire that is overloaded 30 per cent will only deliver 44.5 per cent of its mileage expectancy.

OPEN SUNDAY TIL NOON

TO THE PEOPLE OF BOONE COUNTY:

Every public official, even though a candidate for advanced preferrment, owes to his constituents a proper discharge of the duties of the office now held, even though such discharge requires him to neglect his campaign activities.

I am in this dilemma. Every automobile driver in Boone County must have his or her driver's license on or before August 1, 1943 and during all preceding years I have spent a part of the month of July in the various precincts of the County, selling these licenses and in order that I may not be accused on the one hand of dereliction in duty in not following this same custom, and on the other hand that I may not be accused of using this as a means to an end, I have adopted and shall observe the same identical schedule that I used in 1942,when Judge Riddell was still among us, and there existed no reason for the election of a County Judge.

In addition to this obligation to serve the people the same as last year, the August term of the Boone Circuit Court convenes on Monday, August 9, 1943, and I want the docket at this term of Court to be in exactly the same condition that it has been at all prior terms, and even at the risk of seeming neglect to the electorate of Boone County, I must prepare for this term of Court.

For the reasons above stated, which are special to me, and for the additional reasons of war restriction, which are common to all candidates, I have been unable so far, and will continue to be unable to see all the voters of this county prior to August 7. However, from the beginning of this campaign to the present time I have endeavored to see as many voters as possible and to those whom I have been able to see in person, I have in my own way undertaken to give my reason for asking their support, and to those whom I shall be unable to see, I desire to make a brief statement for their consideration before casting their vote for this important office.

It is my conviction that any officer is a servant of the people who elect him, and should be chosen with the same degree of care with which a business institution would select a Clerk or other employee, or with which a farmer would employ a helper. Offices in some countries, (which we do not especially like at this particular time), are handed out by the dictators in return for political favors rendered, but I prefer to think that in free America the Judge of the Boone County Court should be chosen by the "people" rather than it be handed out as a political plum to some one for past political favors, and that the "people" make this selection strictly upon a basis of qualification for the task to be performed. I base my claim for qualification upon the nine years I have spent in the Clerk's office, the experience had in this time and the knowledge of the law I have gained, and from having been in close association with the affairs of the County.

So far as political alignment is concerned, I have made no deal with any financial institution or with any other candidate for any office either local or state, but have as best I could, managed my own campaign without any help or assistance of any political machine, either local, county, or State.

If my record as the clerk of the Boone Circuit Court for the past nine years convinces the voters of this County that I am competent to manage and discharge the duties of County Judge, I promise if elected, to discharge the duties of that office entirely unassociated with any private interest, devoting my whole time, solely to the office of County Judge.

A. D. YELTON.

NICHOLSON

"Cast thy burden upon the Lord, for He careth for you." In the midst of most bitter trials, the assurance that He cares, and that everything is known to God and that come what may, nothing is hidden from the eye of Him who neither slumbers nor sleeps, enables His followers to say, "God's will is our choice always," and that every thing is wisely and mercifully appointed. We then are refreshed with a sense of the Saviour's love, and kept in perfect peace.

Fish Donated To Restock Several Lakes in Boone County.

Three farmers in Boone County, Logan Keith, Dr. Harry Holton and Mr. Edward Deters, donated fish from their ponds to be transfered to five large lakes in the county. The lake at the 4-H Club Fair Grounds was one to be stocked.

The seining crew of the Fish and Game Conservation Department, transfered these fish. This crew also seined three ponds in Kenton County. Fish were used to stock ponds that had no fish, and 500¢ small fish were placed in Bank Lick Creek.

This work was done under the supervision of the Conservation Officer, Edwin M. Johnson.

THE STORY SO FAR: The story of their part in the battle for the Philippines is being told by four of the five naval officers who are all that is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron 3. They are Lieut. John Bulkeley (now Lieutenant Commander), squadron commander; Lieut. R. B. Kelly, second-in-command; and Ensigns Anthony Akere and George E. Cox Jr. Returning from what turned out to be their last raid against the Japs in the Philippines, the PT boats were bombed and strafed by Jap dive bombers. The men scattered, and Lieut. Kelly, separated from the others, accepted an invitation to stay at the home of a friendly American at Cebu. The Jap attack on Cebu had already begun.

CHAPTER XIV

"Then I went out to this sympathetic American stranger's home, which was on the outskirts on a hill overlooking Cebu City and harbor. I went right to bed after supper, but first I turned on the radio by my bed. It said that Bataan had just fallen. Maybe if they could have been told that those seven fat interisland steamers were on their way loaded with food and quinine, maybe those poor brave, starved, fever-ridden guys could have held the line a little longer. Well, we in the torpedo boats had done what we could. And I wished that Peggy could know that, and that I could thank her for those two codeine tablets, and tell her how they let Reynolds sit out on the deck and really enjoy his last cigarette.

"It was a hell of an explosion which woke me up in the dark, and for a minute I didn't know where I was. Through my window which overlooked the town and the harbor beyond, I could see a fire rising on the outskirts. I looked at my wrist watch. It was 4:25. They were all awake in the house now. Then came an even bigger explosion and a flame ten times as high. My American host came back from the telephone and said that one was the Philippine Refinery; the Japanese were coming and the Americans were blowing up the town. I hustled into my clothes to get back into the city. I wanted to rejoin my three men, but I was stopped on the road by the army—no traffic, everybody must get out. It was 5:30, and by now one-third of the city was in flames.

"People were streaming out—some Americans, and a few of our navy. From them during the morning I heard that the Japs had come back and bombed what was left of our 34 boat on the beach. Well, that was over.

"Then I heard that Bulkeley wasn't dead—his boat escaped and was now in Mindanao. That Brantingham had burned his 35 boat sitting there on 'Dad' Cleland's marine railway—at least the Japs wouldn't get it. That Ensign Richardson had assembled what was left of our men, and joined up with our naval forces on Negros Island, where they would all try to escape to the island of Leyte. It was the last I ever heard of them.

"The Japs had already landed twenty miles down the coast of Cebu—also at two other points.

"'Well, what can I do?' I asked the army.

"'Nothing,' they said. 'Maybe you'd like to join the other evacuees who are assembling at Camp X'—an army stronghold inland which was going to hold out all through the war until help came from the States.

"I couldn't make up my mind, so I waited at this American's house for something better to turn up, and meanwhile watched the Japs invasion from the second-story windows.

"The invasion of Cebu was on a penny-ante scale—we could have stopped them if we'd had anything at all," said Lieutenant Kelly. "They had a destroyer, two transports, and a couple of interisland steamers not a hundred feet long. This gang lay off the channel entrance for a while, and presently they loaded about a thousand infantry into the two steamers (five hundred in each), which set out in column through the channel. The leading boat had a little 3-inch gun on its bow, and every now and then it would bang away toward the city.

"I watched them tie up at about ten o'clock in the morning at the only remaining dock and disembark. Meanwhile the three seaplanes (yes, the same ones) were flying over the city, dropping leaflets in English telling the Philippines to surrender. 'We are your friend,' and offering a substantial reward for any American, dead or alive, and a handsome reward for any American officer or his body. Nice guys. Meanwhile two Zero fighters were strafing the automobiles trying to get out on the road.

"Then we got reports on the progress of the street fighting, which we could also hear from the house. The general had apparently pulled out—maybe to fortify Camp X—but the colonel was staying behind with his soldiers to hold out as long as he could.

"Meanwhile I had been asking the army what was so good about Camp X. Well, it was way up in the hills, they said. It would take days of walking over footpaths, because all the roads into it were blown up.

"'But won't the Japs come after you?'

"'Oh, they'd never do that—it's too hard to get to.'

"What about equipment and guns? Well, they had a radio station, food for several months, a few hundred troops and a few rifles. The more I heard about Camp X, the more distrustful I got, and meanwhile a report came in that the Japs had landed at Toledo. I looked at my map—it was the standard map the army used for operations, put out by the Standard Oil Company with all their filling stations marked—and saw that a good road led directly from Toledo to Camp X. So I asked the army why the Japs wouldn't use it.

"'Oh, we're going to blow that up, just like the others.'

"But the whole Camp X plan looked lousy to me.

"So I started off by myself for the other coast, hoping I could get out to some other island where the Japs hadn't come yet. I joined up with some civilians who were going the same way—they were plantation owners and could speak the dialect. It was a forty-two-mile hike over steep trails which crossed five mountain ranges. We carried a few cans of corned beef, and at night would sleep in native huts with pigs and chickens under us and flies over us, and we would get the natives to cook us rice and corn, and buy chickens which they would roast for us. We used banana leaves for plates, and pieces of bark for forks.

"The second day we heard planes at dawn and all scrambled back out of sight in the hut—peering up through the palms. It was three bombers in formation about fifteen hundred feet.

"Somebody said, pointing, 'Why, look—they're ours!' But I could hardly believe it—even when I saw the stars on their wings, even when I heard the faraway rumble of their bombs dropping on the Japs in Cebu. They were the first American bombers we had seen since before the start of the war. Then we heard some more planes—looked up, and again they were American, a new type with a split tail I'd never seen before but which I learned later were B-25's, and now I realized that here was our big American offensive—the one which we thought had pooped out on us the morning after we sunk the cruiser. Here it was at last—three days too late! Because in the meantime Bataan had fallen, and Cebu.

"Because we little guys—the ones who are expended—never get to see the broad picture of the war, never find out the reasons back of the moves or failures to move. We only see our part—look up through the palm trees at the seamy side of it, so when something poops out, and help doesn't come, and everything goes to hell, we can only hope help didn't come in time for some sensible reason like bad weather conditions in Australia. We hope, but at the time we can't be sure, and we get mad.

"That afternoon we bumped into a bunch of troops; they had come from Camp X. It seemed that at three o'clock in the morning a sentry heard a noise, called out 'Halt!' and was answered by Jap tank fire. Somebody hadn't gotten around to blowing up that road from Toledo. So now impregnable Camp X was no more, all American forces on the island were routed, and everything was going to pot.

"Finally we hit a little native village on the coast and started looking for boats, but the mayor said there were none—the native troops had used them to evacuate that day. But they were swell to us—always out in the country they were swell to us—ignorant guys, maybe, but nice and kind as they could be. I remember on the trail we overtook a ramshackle cart and a few natives, and an old native woman gave the cart driver hell for not putting the baggage in his cart—said we Americans were fighting for their people and they should help us.

"The driver tried to pile it on, but it broke his cart down. He wouldn't take any money—just said he was sorry he couldn't help us more. In those days in the jungle I learned more about how nice the simple Filipino people are than I'd learned in months in Manila; I also learned the more Americanized they are, the lousier they are.

"Leaving this village, we kept on down the road to an even tinier one on the coast—still looking for boats. We found a military headquarters and a Filipino third lieutenant—just a kid—in command of twenty native troops, no machine guns and almost no ammunition. Ten miles of hard-surfaced road connected it with a town where the Japs had landed. He said a Jap tank had come up the road the first day but had turned around and gone back. Why hadn't he blown up the bridges? No dynamite. What was he going to do if the Jap tanks came again? What could he do, he asked, but evacuate? I noticed they had all their gear packed into a bus, and that under their uniforms they wore their civilian clothing. And I couldn't blame them. But they helped us comb the place for boats, and we finally located enough bancas to carry us, and shoved off at dusk.

"We arrived at the next island soaking wet but thankful, and glad we were hailed on the beach by native volunteer guards with home-made rifles, instead of by the Japs.

"Here I said good-by to the American civilians. They owned sugar and coconut plantations and wanted to get to their families. Then they would try to get them to safety, but where was safety? Or maybe, instead of wandering from island to island, it would be better to wait for the Japs in their homes. They couldn't decide. The whole easy, comfortable American world was cracking up fast in those islands. It wasn't nice to watch.

"Meanwhile I caught a ride in a car to the island's military headquarters where there was a general in command, and told the army lieutenant at the desk that I wanted to get over to the island beyond, provided the Japanese hadn't already taken it—what did he know?

"Well, he said, he didn't know for sure, but he didn't think the Japs had taken it.

"I asked him when he had last communicated with military headquarters over there.

"About a month ago, he said.

"Well, I said, this was urgent—I had to find out quick—wasn't there any way of getting in communication with them?

"Well, he said, he guessed he could pick up the telephone on his desk and call them. But, he explained, I was new around here and didn't understand the local situation. It seemed that his general and the general over on the other island didn't get on at all—hadn't liked each other since West Point. 'You fellows may think you're fighting the Japanese,' he said, 'but here we know better. The frontline trenches of the real war are between these two generals.' However, he said, my case made it different, and since I was a naval officer and therefore, so to speak, a neutral, he thought he could take it on his own responsibility to call up headquarters on the other island and ask in my behalf if the Japanese had landed yet.

"He rang them up, and then reported that at the other end of the wire they were talking something which wasn't English or Spanish. Maybe it was Tagalog, which he didn't speak himself, but just in case it was Japanese I had probably better find some other way of going to Mindanao.

"How the war between the generals came out I never learned; maybe they are finishing it in a Japanese prison camp.

"It took me days to get to Mindanao around through the islands, begging rides in cars, hiring small boats to cross little island channels. My objective was to join Bulkeley, who, they had said in Cebu, had escaped the destroyer and was in Mindanao. I wanted to make my report of my part of the battle to him as commander of our squadron. General Sharp, who commanded the island, surely could tell me where he was.

"A Chinese mestizo who was doing a smuggling business of luxury articles among the islands finally landed me, for an enormous price in pesos, at a tiny village on Mindanao which had been abandoned by everybody but one old man, who said yes, a torpedo boat had been in there the week before, and with gestures drew a pretty good picture of Bulkeley's black beard. But he said they'd been there only a few hours, and left for he knew not where. Then he asked when the Japs were coming. Because all the villagers had left, because they were afraid they'd be killed, but I didn't think the Japs would kill an old man, did I?

"I hopped a ride on a truck on down to Iligan, and there was Bulkeley's 41 boat, tied to the dock!

"The first person I saw was Ensign Cox here, and his mouth dropped open. After a few seconds, he said, 'Good God! I heard you were dead!' One by one the crew would come up, stare, then step up to shake my hand and say, 'Gee, Mr. Kelly, we're glad to see you!'"

BIBLE TEACHINGS ON THE COST OF DRINKING

LESSON TEXT—Deuteronomy 21:18-21; Proverbs 23:20, 21; I Corinthians 6:9-11.

GOLDEN TEXT—Know ye not that the unrighteous shall not inherit the kingdom of God?—I Corinthians 6:9.

Billions of dollars—how many we cannot say—make up the annual cost of liquor to America in dollars and cents. Terrifying as it is, that stupendous waste is but a drop in the bucket compared with the moral and spiritual degradation, the sorrow and suffering, the poverty and distress, which must be added into our liquor bill.

For it is not only a matter of dollars, but of blood and tears, or destroyed usefulness, lost virtue, wrecked homes, and so on and on and on. We go right on paying the bill, allowing ourselves to be misled by clever propaganda, and skillfully manipulated statistics—or it may be our sheer indifference. When will America awaken!

Our lesson faces us with the cost of this despicable traffic in the life of the individual to the social order, and in the light of eternity.

I. The Personal Cost (Deut. 21: 18-21).

Liquor destroys individuals relentlessly, rapidly, and effectively. Have we forgotten that fact?

The passage in Deuteronomy presents a drastic remedy for a dreadful situation. Drink and gluttony were recognized as the deadly instrument which would bring a boy to the place where he was incorrigible. Stubborn, rebellious, and disobedient, his parents were to bring him to the elders for a final judgment.

If one thinks the penalty too harsh, he must remember that it was established in the early days of Israel when it was necessary for God to use such drastic remedies to stamp out incipient evil.

It must be remembered that in ancient Greece weak children were left out to die, and in Rome a father could at will put to death even a grown up son.

The point of this scripture for us is that a life of debauchery (and it can start with just a glass of wine) leads to the ultimate destruction of life. It is far too high a cost to pay for a sinful indulgence.

II. The Social Cost (Prov. 23: 20, 21).

Drunkenness and gluttony lead to poverty and rags. The intemperate man cannot keep up with the high cost of supplying his growing appetite. Even as he tries to satisfy its insatiable demand, it also renders him unfit to earn a living.

So the vicious circle works its way around, and stops not until the drunkard totters off in his rags, unless perchance some loved one or friend takes care of him.

Do we not all recall how families in our own communities have been ruined and become charges upon the county or charitable organizations because of the destruction wrought by a father who was a winebibber.

Not only does it bring poverty upon families, but it reduces able and gifted men to shambling wrecks and thus deprives society of the benefit of their lives and service.

A present-day illustration is the unsolved problem of absenteeism for days after pay day in our essential industries. Again we say the cost is altogether too high; let us get rid of this monster before it destroys us!

III. The Eternal Cost (I Cor. 6: 9-11).

Money lost is serious. Life lost is far more serious. But the saddest cost of all is the eternal damnation of the drinker's soul.

We quote from Dr. Horace Martin these stirring and meaningful words: "It is my calm judgment that any man who names the name of Christ should take an attitude of horror and disgust at the liquor traffic and the use of liquor as a beverage. There are at least three places in the New Testament where the Bible says that no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God.

"If any man takes that statement seriously he must think twice before he refers to the use of liquor in a joking manner, or in any way condones the use of alcohol as a beverage" (Lesson Commentary).

Drunkenness is a foul and sinful thing, classed by the apostle Paul with the lowest of human vices. Review the list as it is given in verses 9 and 10 (and by the way notice the other sins mentioned there), and place drunkenness in its proper classification.

Call it what it really is—sin, and then call on the One who can save from sin. You will then be washed from your sin, sanctified, and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus (v. 11). In Christ there is hope for the drunkard. A spiritual revival is the real answer to the liquor problem. Let us seek to promote it even as we at the same time give ourselves to an intelligent and constructive battle against this destructive force in the life of our nation.

Cleopatra Was Pioneer In Painting Fingernails

The flapper of not-so-many years back didn't start the vogue for painted fingernails. The real pioneer in that field was Cleopatra. Aspasia, girl friend of Pericles, also tinted her nails. As a matter of fact, a husband 2,300 years ago "raised Ned" with his wife because she used cosmetics so extravagantly.

Whoever it is that gets credit for scolding girls for powdering their noses in public, is just an interloper. Ovid said many centuries ago: "A statue is never shown until it is finished."

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO HOME CANNERS

The Glass Top Seal Fruit Jar Cap for Home Canning was developed as a Wartime product to conserve metal. It consists of a Metal Band, Glass Lid and Rubber Ring.

Because of the difference in the nature of these three materials this Cap must be used differently from any other fruit jar cap. If used properly it will give excellent results. If not used properly, results will be bad, including failure to seal and breakage of jars. Following are simple instructions for use of the Glass Top Seal Cap and must be followed carefully.

1. Do NOT use in Oven Canning.

2. If processing, (cooking in jar), leave 1 inch space in top of jar. If using open kettle, leave ½ inch space in top of jar.

3. Fit rubber around projection on bottom side of lid.

4. Place lid so rubber lies between lid and top edge of jar.

5. Turn bands tight, then loosen slightly (about ¼ turn). Bands must fit loosely during processing (cooking). This is Important and must be done to insure best results. If using Open Kettle, screw bands tight as soon as jar is filled.

6. After processing, screw bands tight to complete seal. Remove bands 12 hours after canning.

For complete canning instructions send ten cents for your copy of the Ball Blue Book to Ball Brothers Company, Muncie, Indiana, U. S. A.

SMOKES and the SOLDIER

Is it true that a soldier is always hungry?

Yes—up to a point. But the Quartermaster Department has found that some soldiers, particularly new recruits, actually don't eat enough.

The Army mess table is exactly like a football team's training table. The food served there is carefully planned to aid in the physical development of the soldier. And the Army has discovered certain little ways to increase Johnny Doughboy's appetite.

The Army has found it can add to a soldier's enjoyment of his food—and therefore increase his consumption of all those carefully prepared vitamins, minerals, and proteins—if he is allowed to smoke during meals. Measured tests run by the Quartermaster's Department show that food consumption actually increased by 5% when soldiers were permitted to smoke cigarettes at the mess table.

"Smokes," of course, play a prominent part in many phases of the life of a soldier. Whenever you see a news photo of soldiers at ease, you're apt to see them enjoying a cigarette. Particularly among American troops overseas, cigarettes—real American cigarettes—are highly prized and almost never present in sufficient quantities.

What kind of cigarettes do Uncle Sam's fighting men prefer? Well, records show that the favorite cigarette is Camel. That is true not only with men in the Army, but with Sailors, Marines, and Coast Guardsmen as well. Sales records from the service men's own stores—Post Exchange, Sales Commissaries, Ship's Service Stores, Ship's Stores, and Canteens—show that Camels are first with men in all branches of the service.

Further proof that Uncle Sam's fighting men like their smokes is given in the service man's preference in gifts from home—it's a carton of his favorite brand of cigarettes. Tobacco dealers, recognizing that Camels are the favorite among service men, are equipped to help you in properly wrapping, addressing, and stamping your gift of Camels to the man in the service.—Adv.

Gallant Is the Word

A pendant to the historic cloak incident of Queen Elizabeth and Sir Walter Raleigh is surely supplied in this story, told by Arthur Croxton, many years manager of the London Coliseum music hall (in his reminiscences):

The courtly mayor of a small town in the Midlands of England had the honor of dancing, at some public ceremonial, with Queen Alexandra—then princess of Wales. She smilingly warned him that she had just had measles in her household, and that she hoped that she would not give him the disease. Bowing low, the mayor answered. "Your royal highness, I should be happy to take anything from so charming a source."

Marvin Jones' Crop Report

War Food Administrator Marvin Jones said recently that, on the average, farmers are meeting this year's production goals for field crops. Earlier reports indicated that Livestock and livestock products also will reach production goals. Mr. Jones said: "We will have enough food in this country—given at least average weather for the rest of the year—to give civilians adequate and healthful diets, in addition to meeting military and other essential wartime requirements. This does not mean, of course, that there is any better chance than appeared earlier for having all the food that civilians would like to buy, or that civilian supplies for some individual items will not be far below the demand.

"For some important crops—including rice, oats, flaxseed, and potatoes, estimated 1943 acreage is well above the year's goals.

Soldiers' Life Insurance

Soldiers—at home or abroad—are reminded that less than three weeks remain in which they can get National Service Life Insurance without a physical examination. Until August 10, 1943, every application will be accepted regardless of the individual's medical condition. After August 10 a rigid physical examination will be required.

Farmers Will Get Gasoline

"Farmers are entitled to first call in receiving motor fuel when they present valid 'E', 'R' or bulk coupons or ration checks which are issued pursuant to Ration Order 5-C of the Office of Price Administration. Dealers (wheather retail or wholesale) must accord them this privilege. This means, that if necessary, the dealer shall not deliver any more fuel for any non-agricultural or non-military use until these preferred demands have been "satisfied"—statement by Acting Petroleum Administrator for War Ralph K. Davies.

Soldiers Send Money By Radio

American soldiers overseas except those in Alaska, Hawaii, Panama Canal Zone, and Puerto Rico may now send money home by radio. In recent weeks more than 9,000 soldiers sent nearly $1,000,000, in amounts of $10 or more, with no maximum limit. Money may be transmitted to an individual payee, or to a bank. The process is speedy and sure. If a soldier desires to do so, he may also purchase war bonds by this method.

No Corn For Liquor

Corn cannot be used for manufacture of distilled spirits and high wines, a recent directive of the War Production Board says. The action was taken to conserve stocks of corn for essential purposes, although the amount of corn saved is likely to be small because distillers already had shifted largely to the use of wheat.

Country Shipper Berry Prices

Maximum prices of seven kinds of fresh berries for table and home canning use have been set by the OPA. Maximum prices, per pound, f. o. b. country shipping points, are set as follows: red raspberries 18 cents; black respberries 16 cents; youngberries, boysenberries, loganberries, and blackberries 15 cents; gooseberries 11 cents. These prices represent a sharp rollback at the country shipper level and comparable prices have been established at wholesale, both of which are expected to reduce prices of berries to consumers.

8 Million pounds of waste kitchen fats in May—highest total since the fats and grease salvage program was started. This result surprised government officials who said that a drop might have been expected because meats and fats have been rationed since March. Nevertheless, the 8 million pounds is only about 50 percent of the needed quota of 16,667,000 pounds per month.

Rollback Of Vegetable Prices

Effective July 20, a rollback of about 25 percent in the price of lettuce and 50 percent in the price of cabbage was ordered by the OPA. This was the first step in a program to cut back the excessive prices of fresh fruits and vegetables to keep the cost of living down.

More Community-Wide Prices

OPA will continue to establish community-wide prices on foods sold at retail, even though it has recently issued over-all fixed mark-up regulations. The housewife cannot easily tell wheather a storekeeper has made his prices by the markup method, and that is the reason OPA will proceed with community-wide maximums.

Before making a trip, motorists must apply to their ration board for written authorization stating the startng point and destination of the trip and dates on which it will be made. Authorization does not give the motorist an extra ration of gasoline.

Maternity Care For Servicemen's Wives

More than three-fourths of the states have received approval by the Children's Bureau, Department of Labor, of programs for medical and hospital maternity care for wives of men in the four lowest pay grades of the armed services. The programs also include medical care for babies. A serviceman's wife may make application for complete medical care during pregnancy and childbirth, and for six weeks after childbirth. She may also apply for medical care for her child to extend throughout the child's first year of life. To get such care, all that the wife needs to do is to fill out simple forms, which, if her own doctor is unable to furnish copies, she can get from the State health department.

Labor Shortage In Tobacco And Hay Harvesting Seen

A survey of the labor situation the past week as reported by local farmers indicates hay harvest and tobacco are the two most difficult labor problems now confronting the farmer according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. Fruit picking, tomato picking and before long corn harvesting, silo filling and small grain seeding were also listed as labor problems in the near future.

Farmers the past two weeks have done an excellent job of hay harvesting. It is estimated that more than 60% per cent of the grass and clover hay has already been harvested.

Recent hot weather and lack of rain gives indication of a drowth over several sections of the county. A large percent of the corn is now reaching the tosseling stage where a rain is important. Tobacco on many farms is beginning to fire at the bottom of the plant.

Every effort should be made to plan work and cooperate in harvesting the most important food and feed crop ever produced in the County. Our farmers are doing an outstanding job in meeting this challenge. The cooperative and helpful spirit between farmers, their neighbors, businessmen, friends and others have never before done as good a job toward getting food produced and harvested under the most difficult conditions.

Burlington Farm Volunteer Group

The Burlington farm volunteer group assisted two more farmers this past week in harvesting fifteen acres of hay crops. This group is comprises of approximately fifteen local business men and county officials.

Contrary to the original plans for this group the workers todate have refused to accept pay. They state they are only interested as a patriotic service and desire to select from requests only those in need and who could not otherwise harvest their crops.

Regardless of what plans followed these men do an excellent job of work. They render labor service in the same efficent manner they work in their own business and to date they have gotten the job done.

4-H Club Camp Great Success

The 4-H Club Camp at Camp Bingham in Washington County was a great success according to O. D. Perkinson, Assistant County Agent.

Two hundred and fifteen boys and girls from seven counties took part in the activities of the camp. Every boy and girl had definite responsibilities. Time was about equally devided between recreation and instruction. All instruction centered around methods of preserving foods and feeds for winter use.

The Boone County delegation was made up of nine boys and six girls. Seven of this number of boys had earned scholarships and all six of the girls were champions. David King of Verona and Wanda Pennington of New Haven received special recognition at camp. They were voted the Gold Medal for being the most outstanding campers on the grounds, Billie Acree was chosen as one of the Star Campers.

Everyone expressed themselves as having a good time at camp and most members went home with the thought in mind that they would go back to camp next year. They know that to go they must win in the various club activities, for this reason we are expecting some extra good club work starting now.

Purchase Or Sale Of Game Fish Is Illegal.

Frankfort, Ky., July—Attention was called today by S. A. Wakefield, Director of the Division of Game and Fish, to sections of the Kentucky laws which prohibit the sale or purchase of certain species of fish, regardless of where the fish were taken.

The law makes it illegal to sell or buy black bass, channel or fiddler cats under fifteen inches in length, sturgeon or hackleback, crappie, jack salmon or walleyed pike or striped bass, sand pike or sauger.

This statute was enacted to protect Kentucky fishing from commercialisation and give all anglers a better opportunity to secure food and enjoy outdoor recreation.

Urge Vaccination To Check Cholera

With hog cholera wide-spread in Kentucky, officials at the Agricultural Expeiment Station at Lexington again are calling the attention of farmers to the need of vaccinating all hogs. The best time to vaccinate is 10 to 15 days after pigs are weaned. It then takes less serum, there is less danger of losses, and the pigs are easier to handle.

However, hogs can be vaccinated at any age. All hogs, of whatever size and age, going through sale yard hould be vaccinated before they leave the yards. The exception would be finished hogs going to market for slaughter. If hogs offered for sale are reported to have been vaccinated, the seller should be required to furnish a written statement, as to when they were vaccinated, by whom, at what age, and the method of vaccination used.

The Department of Animal Pathology at the Experiment Station believes it would pay all hog raisers to follow a regular systematic plan of immunizing hogs against cholera. The price of hogs and the need for pork should be sufficient to warrant exercising every possible means of preventing cholera, the statement says.

Squirrel Season For 1943 Starts August 15 Throughout Ky.

Frankfort, Ky., July—Kentucky open season on squirrels will begin August 15 and end on Oct. 31st throughout the entire state with a daily bag limit of six, it was announced today by S. A. Wakefield, Director of the Division of Game and Fish.

The opening and closing dates of the season and the bag limit, applying to the state as a whole, are the same as were in effect during the 1942 season and which met with general approval on the part of the hunters.

An abundance of squirrels has been reported from most sections of the state by Conservation Officers and other observers, indicating that reports show the squirrel population above that of last year and favorable conditions for good hunting following the opening of the season.

Kentuckians were reminded by Wakefield that Kentucky Game laws require every hunter to have a 1943 license, regardless of age, with the only exceptions being the resident farm owner and tenant who limits his hunting to the farm which he owns or on which he is a tenant.

Third War Loan Drive To Begin Throughout Nation September 9th

Organizations throughout the nation are being perfected in anticipation of the approaching Third War Loan Drive to begin September 9th for Sixteen Billion Dollars to be subscribed by individuals. This is much greater than the Second War Loan last April.

Banks will not be permitted to subscribe to any of this amount. The various issues will not be announced until about September 9th, when the drive starts.

Mr. Joshua B. Everett, State Vice Chairman of the Kentucky Committee of the War Finance Committee in charge of the Eastern half of Kentucky, in which district Boone County is located, and Mr. A. A. Hines, Executive assistant to State Chairman, Mr. Ben Williamson, of Ashland, were in Burlington one day last week in conference with A. B. Renaker, relative to organization for this Third War Loan Campaign.

These gentlemen requested that the Boone County organization remain intact as constituted in the two previous drives except that the committee will known as The War Finance Committee, and at their insistence Mr. Renaker agreed to accept the Chairmanship of Boone County for the coming campaign.

Some time, in advance of September 9th, Mr. Renaker stated that he expected to call a meeting of all precinct chairmen, who have been serving, to receive suggestions and work out details of the organization.

The State Organization is composed of Ben Williamson, Ashland, State Chairman; W. H. Courtney, Lexington, Chairman of the State Executive Committee; with Joshua B. Everett of Maysville, chairman of the eight groups of the Eastern section of the State, of which Boone County is a part, and Edward A. Vosmer, Covington, Chairman of Group One, which includes, the counties of Boone, Campbell, Grant, Harrison, Kenton and Pendleton.

It will take the combined and unlimited efforts of every man and woman in Boone County this time to reach our quota, which has as yet not been assigned, but we know the quota will be much larger than in the last drive which means that all of us will have to make larger subscriptions than in the past.

The war news is most encouraging and it is up to us on the home front to keep the money flowing to the boys on the firing line to bring this horrible war to a speedy conclusion.

Sheep Treated By New Method

Sheep are being treated for stomach worms by a new method that is being recommended by the U. S. Department of Agriculture acording to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. The treatment is with Phenothiazine.

The war time labor saving recommendation is to mix 1 part phenothiazine with 9 parts salt and to keep this mixture before the sheep at all times. This treatment according to research work not only controls nodular worms but also other types of stomach worms.

Last year there was some question as to whether phenothiazine affected the breeding of the ewes. While recent experimental work indicates it does not it may be better to try this plan this year only on lambs.

The chief advantage of this plan over the drench or pill treatment is that it saves labor.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Italians Feel Power of United Nations As Sicily Topples and Rome Is Bombed; Navy Blasts Japs in Battle Off Munda; U. S. Civilians Get Rationing Forecasts

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

FOOD:

Maintain Meat Ration

Maintenance of the present meat ration at "about the present level" was predicted by the War Food administration following the allocation of estimated supplies among civilians, the services and other users for the next 12 months.

Total allocable meat supplies were put at 23¼ billion pounds. Civilians will receive 63 out of every 100 pounds produced, the services will be given 17 pounds, the Allies will get 14 pounds, and allotments for reserves, the Red Cross and exports will amount to 6 pounds.

Of the total supply of beef expected, civilians will obtain 66 out of every 100 pounds, and the services 23 pounds. Other claimants will get 2 pounds. Of the pork production, the civilians' share will amount to 59 out of every 100 pounds, the services' portion will be 13½ pounds, and lend-lease's allotment will approximate 25 pounds.

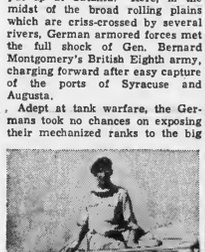
Total supplies of lamb and mutton are expected to drop sharply from the 939 million pounds of 1942 to 539 million. This compares with the 1935-'39 average of 863 million pounds.

Cheese, Butter

Decrease of government purchases through August, September and October will make available 527 million pounds of butter and cheese for civilians, the WFA said. Of the total, approximately 400 million pounds will be of butter; 92 million pounds of cheddar cheese, and 35 million pounds of other cheese.

WFA also announced that plans were made for about 7 million additional cases of canned baby foods, condensed milk, other milk products and certain canned vegetables and fruits by an increase in canners' tin quotas. However, it was pointed out that shortage in fruit crops may offset the extra tin allotments.

Increased production will allow civilians 388 eggs apiece during the next 12 months, WFA said, 18 more than in 1942.



The Office of Price Administration also stepped into the food picture and announced prices of cabbage and lettuce will be rolled back 25 to 50 per cent.

SICILY:

First Resistance

History will record that the first real Axis resistance in Sicily was put up at Catania. Here, in the midst of the broad rolling plains which are criss-crossed by several rivers, German armored forces met the full shock of Gen. Bernard Montgomery's British Eighth army, charging forward after easy capture of the ports of Syracuse and Augusta.

Adept at tank warfare, the Germans took no chances on exposing their mechanized ranks to the big Montgomery on Sicilian front.

Berthas of British warships plying along the narrow eastern coast of the island, and to the Allies heavy artillery, which could be concentrated in the tight coastal corridor. Instead, they determined to take their chances in the sprawling Catania plains, where they could maneuver more comfortably.

History will show that as the Germans and British locked horns on these plains, with the enemy holding his flexible lines in the early days of the fighting, Gen. George S. Patton's American Seventh army rolled 30 miles inland to Enna, which is situated on high ground and commands important roads running east and west across the island.

SOUTH PACIFIC:

1. Planes blast Jap shipping trying to supply beleaguered garrison at Munda.

2. Navy sees six more years of war in Pacific.

Air Power Scores Again.

The devastating striking power of land-based aircraft against surface vessels was again amply demonstrated in the Solomons offensive when American Liberator, Mitchell and Avenger bombers attacked a strong Japanese concentration of 11 warships and transports in Vella gulf, sinking a cruiser and two destroyers and scattering the others.

Sailing in the dead of night, the Japs were making another try at reinforcing their entrapped troops at Munda airfield, on New Georgia island, where U. S. dive bombers also were in action supporting the ground units' creeping attack on the stronghold's jungle defenses.

The attack in Vella gulf followed others made upon Jap vessels in

Sgt. Thomas Gacicot kneels at grave of fallen buddy on Rendova island.

Kula gulf and brought to 24 the number of different enemy ships sent to the bottom since the Solomons offensive started.

Sees Long War.

Because the war in the Pacific must be fought over great distances and bases must be built from the ground up, Vice Admiral Frederick J. Horne, assistant chief of naval operations, declared the navy was figuring on at least six years of fighting.

Horne cautioned against optimism that the war would be over in a hurry, asserting that every slight success fills the people with unwarranted hope and invariably results in a drop of war production. To defeat Japan, he said, we will need a fleet and air force twice as big as the enemy's, and he claimed that the present building program will bring a seven-fold expansion in our navy by 1947.

Neither should we look for a collapse in Germany such as occurred during the last war, Horne said. Clever indoctrination of Nazi principles in the German people has given the nation a firm will to fight the war to the finish, he explained.

ROME:

Raid Momentous

One of the greatest stirs of the war was caused by the Allied bombing of Rome. Both here and abroad, no effort was made to minimize the import of the action.

The Allies maintained that Rome constitutes a legitimate military objective, as best illustrated by the railway yards through which all north and south bound traffic in Italy is routed. Demolition of these yards, the Allies say, would severely cripple Axis communication on the mainland.

Besides the important railway yards, Rome also harbors other industrial installations, it is pointed out. In the raid in which 500 American Flying Fortresses participated, the Allies said a steel plant and a large chemical works were damaged.

The Italian government's belief that Rome would not be bombed because of the cultural and religious landmarks which abound throughout the entire area, was indicated by the lack of strong preparation made against attack. Anti-aircraft fire was weak, few planes rose to intercept the Allied squadrons and 166 persons were killed and 1,659 injured.

LABOR:

Wants Cheaper Food

Declaring "profiteers and speculators are sapping the strength of the nation's army of workers," William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, said that unless prices of food were brought down "to a reasonable level," organized labor would demand wage increases.

At present, wage increases have been restricted to 15 per cent over the January, 1941, scales. Leveling his attack on food, Green said that AFL surveys in principal cities had shown costs in labor's market basket had risen from 50 to 200 per cent since the war started.

Criticizing the Office of Price Administration and War Food administration for failing to halt the increase in food prices, Green demanded "intelligent and orderly action to assure workers and their families of a decent place to live in and enough nourishing food to eat within their incomes."

Green's statement followed one by CIO chieftain William Murray, who similarly threatened that organized labor would seek wage increases unless food prices were rolled back. The administration is committed to a roll-back program.

HOGS:

Ceiling $14.75

With a "floor" or minimum price of $13.75 per hundred pounds promised for hogs, the government established a "ceiling" or maximum price of $14.75. At the same time the "floor" was extended to all porkers between 200 and 270 pounds.

Despite the government's promise, however, hogs were selling for less than the "floor" in some big markets. In the Chicago yards, heavy runs recently drove the average price down to $13.35, with tops averaging $13.85 and others bringing $12.85.

Overhauling its present system of slaughter control to provide for record receipts, the government announced that packers will be licensed to operate if they pay not less than the "floor" nor more than the "ceiling" price for hogs, and if they make appropriate division of meat supplies among civilian, military and lend-lease groups.

It was also revealed that the government intended to extend federal inspection to plants now without the facilities. Under present regulations, the government cannot purchase meat from any packers without such inspection. The new arrangement promises a more equitable distribution of meat in the country.

RUSSIA:

Front Aflame

On the offensive for the first summer in three years, the Red army hacked at German lines along much of the vast 1,200 mile front.

The main drive remained directed at the Nazi salient of Orel, with Russian forces bearing down upon that hub from north and south. A junction of the two spearheads behind Orel would seal off thousands of German troops now fighting around the city and also sever the railroad from Bryansk carrying supplies to the embattled base.

While fighting raged around Orel, the Reds pressed home three other attacks. Preceded by heavy artillery and air bombardment, they assaulted Nazi lines below Leningrad, near Smolensk and around the German Caucasian base of Novorossisk, where they had been beaten off this spring.

MANPOWER:

Unfreeze Jobs

Workers frozen into their jobs in war or essential industries by an order of the War Manpower commission April 17, now will be allowed to accept the same positions at higher pay in other plants.

Workers formerly could transfer to other jobs only if laid off for seven days or more, if discharged or if able to show that their skill would be employed to better advantage elsewhere.

CORN 'SIT DOWN STRIKE'

High ranking officials of the agriculture department are frank in saying that farmers are impeding the war effort just as much as striking coal miners when they stage a sit-down strike on corn.

Feed corn is desperately needed by poultry farmers, dairy farmers, and corn processors. But corn is not moving to market because farmers are holding for a higher price.

The typical farmer in the corn belt today is looking at his bins full of corn and reasoning that he might as well hold it for a while, since he doesn't need the cribs yet, and since the price might go up.

Washington is partly to blame for this. The attacks on OPA, the firing of Chester Davis, and the congressional demands to set aside the price ceiling, all have created uncertainty. So the farmer sits tight, saying, "I'll just wait till they make up their minds."

But when thousands of farmers do the same thing, it creates a scarcity which throws the national economy out of gear just as much as the lack of coal production. The patriotic thing to do, say Washington officials, is to send your corn to market now, especially since the farmer is guaranteed the benefit of a price rise, if it comes.

Meantime, the corridors of the department of agriculture are seething. Pressure for a corn rise is terrific. This is Marvin Jones' first big battle.

WICKARD GOES SHOPPING

Secretary of Agriculture Claude Wickard went shopping with Mrs. Wickard the other day. He stood in the grocery store watching the shoppers, while Mrs. Wickard did the buying.

He noticed a crush in front of the meat counter, while the vegetables, including potatoes, were going begging.

"That's human nature for you," mused Wickard. "Only a few weeks ago, when potatoes were short for a few days, there was a great howl from the public, and potatoes were sold in the black market. Now there's plenty of potatoes—but everybody wants meat."

When Mrs. Wickard appeared from the crush, she announced with pride that she had some meat.

"How much did you pay for it?" asked Wickard.

"Nine points," replied Mrs. Wickard.

"No," said the secretary of agriculture. "I mean how much money—how much a pound?"

"Oh, I don't know," she said. "All I know is it cost nine points out of my red stamps."

Wickard shook his head. "That's the trouble with you women," he said. "You're not thinking about the cost of food, but only whether you can get it or not. How do you expect merchants to hold to the price ceilings, if you don't even know what you pay?"

Mrs. Wickard promised to do better next time.

Want to Move Fast.

The method used in invading Sicily was a compromise among land, air and naval elements, resulting in the "peculiar amphibious operations" Churchill talked about. But the air forces believe they can move even faster and more effectively in conquering other parts of Italy if they don't have to be tied down by classical warfare.

For instance, with bases in Sicily, army airmen think they can so pulverize the industrial plants of northern Italy that they can bomb that country out of the war without waiting for huge landing operations to come up and help them.

Then with air bases in northern Italy, they are within range of the hidden synthetic gasoline and rubber factories which Hitler has moved into Austria and Czechoslovakia. Thus, step by step, the air forces believe they can knock out the enemy without resorting to classical warfare.

Axis Planes Knocked Out.

Here is one significant thing army airmen point to. During the ten days just before we invaded Sicily the Nazis had been sending a lot of new planes into Sicily and southern Italy.

But after one day of fresh Axis air strength, which was heavily damaged by U. S. planes, there followed a day or two of weak resistance. In other words, Axis planes were knocked out and had to wait for reinforcements. These reinforcements kept coming up until about two days before the invasion, after which Axis air resistance was light.

'Food Will Win the War' —And Maybe an Election

Washington Politicians Awaken to Fact That Voting Public, Like an Army, 'Moves on Its Stomach.'

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

Wars and rumors of war, war production, man power, post-war plans, race riots, roll-backs, gas rationing, strikes, floods, offensives—you can think of a lot more probably. All right, pour them all into the hopper. Grind them up. This is a pretty dish to set before a voter in 1944! Don't worry, he can take it. But take away his bread-basket, and he is a different animal.

Food will win the war.

Lack of it can postpone victory if it doesn't spell defeat.

And food, or lack of it, can lose an election, that is what you are hearing in Washington these days.

An electorate, like an army, moves on its stomach. On an empty stomach, it moves away from the "ins," hollers for the "outs" to bring back the bacon. And when you get a customer with both an empty stomach and a full pocketbook hammering on the table and demanding service, you have a hard customer to please.

Slowly, the Washington politicians are beginning to awaken to that fact —that food is going to be the big issue in the next election.

President Saw It First

The President and his keen-eyed, ears-to-the-ground political scouts recognized it first, and when Phil Murray, head of the CIO, and William Green of the AFL began to call for the roll-back of prices, the administration was quick to promise that they would be served "right away." Meanwhile, some of the other guests are beginning to feel neglected.

But before roll-backs au gratin could be served, congress stuck its foot out and tried to spill the tray. For a while, it looked as if there was going to be embarrassment in the political kitchen.

Even if the administration is able to silence the demands and threats of labor, there are a lot of other Oliver Twists who "want some more" and who will twist out of their straight-ticket voting and start looking for "a better 'ole" unless this food question is solved before the ides of November MCMXLIV.

Through the days when congress was first trying to fold its tent and steal away from the banks of the Potomac, one thing was clear: unless the administration pulled a nice, fat and succulent rabbit out of the hat which could be served up to the electorate with enough basketsfull left over for the fighting forces and the hungry Allies and other prospective clients, the Gallup poll vaulters which had re-re-re-elected the New Deal in advance would have to start their polling all over again.

The enemies of the administration are building up a barrage to the effect that Mr. Roosevelt has bribed labor and has left his old friends, the farmers, in the lurch. They say that because he was afraid to offend labor, he listened to their demands for lower prices and turned a deaf ear to the farmers' troubles.

This, of course, since it comes from hardly non-partisan quarters, has to be taken with a grain of salt, but whatever the working man says, when he sees the cost of living eating up his former "raises" if he has had them, the record will show that despite John Lewis' polysyllabic attacks on the President, labor has not been treated exactly as a step-child.

But what has the farmer been getting meanwhile?

A couple of assists, at least, which have benefited him and the war effort at the same time.

FCA Head Reports

Let me report to you what I learned from Governor Black of the Farm Credit administration, an institution which has managed to escape the attacks which most of the government agencies have had to weather. Governor Black was in Washington the other day—the headquarters of the Farm Credit administration were moved to Kansas City a year ago, you know, in the interest of decentralization and with the idea that after all, Kansas is nearer the center of American agriculture than the Atlantic seaboard.

The governor tells me that the FCA has been used heavily since the first of the year to see that farmers are getting the credit they need to achieve all-out production. He admits that the 50 million dollars loaned to farmers and stockmen isn't much compared with the total amount of production financing which the farmers use in a year but it's something even in these days of astronomical lending, leasing and spending.

The loans are made through the Regional Agricultural Credit corporation.

Take flax—flax is as important in its way as tanks are in theirs. The automobile manufacturers have had it made worth their while to manufacture tanks instead of autos. The farmers up in—take North Dakota, for instance—have "shared the risk" as Black puts it, with the RACC (Regional Agricultural Credit corporation) which extended them credit to "change over" to flax. Instead of one million three hundred thousand acres of this valuable crop that was harvested last year, a million EIGHT hundred and forty thousand acres were seeded this year (41.4 per cent government financed).

Take dry beans in Montana: 50,000 acres seeded this year, double last year's planting, 84.5 per cent of the crop government financed. I could go down the list with peanuts in South Carolina, sweet potatoes in Louisiana and Mississippi, ad infinitum.

Simple Machinery

The way this share-the-risk thing works is simple. The farmer puts up his land and labor, the RACC puts up the out-of-pocket costs after the county war board and its own representatives have approved the deal.

If the crop comes out all right, the farmer pays the loan. If it is wiped out by bugs, drouth or disaster (and when Ol' Man River went hog-wild this spring, there was a lot of wiping out) his liability isn't wiped out, too, because his liability is limited to what he took in from the crop and the incentive payments or insurance on it.

"It wasn't so much a matter of how much money was loaned," Governor Black said to me, "as where it was loaned and what it was loaned for. In the past few months, the country has awakened to the necessity of producing the vital crops to the limit, and that's where we concentrated our financing."

Well, that is one agency that has been able to go ahead without having to duck the political brickbats.

Other government agencies, not so lucky, had to take a lot of punishment that wouldn't have been directed at them if it weren't for politics. The poor Commodity Credit corporation, which everybody seems to love for itself alone, got into an unpleasant jam with the subsidies, and had a tight squeeze partly through pure politics, partly because congress and the President didn't see eye-to-eye on the anti-inflation program.

What most people fail to realize is this: even now with all the splendid effort the farmers have made, agriculture has not yet been entirely "converted"—I don't mean converted to the "all-out" idea but converted in the sense that civilian industry was converted to war production—autos to tanks and planes, sewing machines to machine guns. Industry had plenty of "incentive." The farmers have had some help, will have more.

And the consumer (who is really everybody) and the farmer and the worker, haven't gotten it through their heads yet that unless they all hang together, they'll hang separately.

If we don't get the food, we won't be able to eat the dollars, no matter how many we may have in our sock.

IF YOU are furnishing a combination living and dining room with odds and ends from the family attic why not use paint and inexpensive fabrics to harmonize unrelated pieces?

Here a combination chest and dish cupboard has been made from an old dresser. The cupboard at the lower right sits on top of the dresser and a quarter round molding nailed to the dresser top holds plates in place. Both dresser and chairs are painted cream color and quaint Dutch designs in gay colors are stenciled on them. The chair seat covers repeat the colors in these designs.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Millions of wild Hevea seeds from Brazil have been sent to neighboring countries and as far north as Central America in the extensive program under way to encourage rubber development in the Western hemisphere. Congress appropriated $500,000 in 1940 to stimulate rubber planting in the Americas.

India rubber pontoons and pontoon boats were used by the U. S. government 100 years ago. They were made of coated canvas in three compartments, each inflated by a separate tube. They were inflated by a hand bellows and collapsed and sank with the slightest leak.

Speaking of Sports

by Bob McShane

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

THE return of Patty Berg, brilliant Minneapolis professional, to the golfing wars was a pleasant event to the thousands of persons who watched her win the recent Women's Western Open golf tournament at Chicago.

As you know, the buxom Miss Berg was told by physicians after an automobile accident in Texas in December, 1941, that she would be lucky to walk again, let alone play golf. But the golfing galleries saw Patty trudging over the fairways with her knee still bound tightly. Although she limps slightly, she has good reason to be proud of the progress.

Her heartening comeback did not come without a great deal of effort. She explains it simply.

"A year ago I started practicing for half an hour a day until I got so I could pivot fairly well. Then I started playing a few holes at a time, finally working it up until I could go the full round only several months ago. But I never played more than 18 holes in one day until now. Going the 29 holes to win twice convinced me my comeback is a success.

Recovery Route

"Another thing that is a tremendous help is swimming. I go to an indoor pool every morning—when not in a tournament—and swim for about 30 minutes. Then I straighten my knee by pumping a bicycle. You'll find me out riding a bike every day now."

Then, too, she has altered her playing methods to some extent. Patty credits Les Bolstad of Minneapolis, one of the Northwest's best-known pros, with changing her swing and stance to ease the pressure on her injured knee.

About Bowling

Despite the many obvious handicaps confronting it, bowling recently wound up one of the most successful seasons in history and still retains top place as the most popular year-round participant sport.

A report released by the American Bowling Congress shows that there are 16,000,000 Americans now spilling pins. This total includes 13,500,000 men, 2,000,000 women and approximately 500,000 youngsters. Of these, 14,280,000 bowl against ten-pins—the big pins—and 1,800,000, principally along the eastern and southern seaboards, roll against duckpins and candlepins.

It may surprise you to learn that the busiest bowling proprietor in the country is your Uncle Sam, who manages 3,027 alleys at army, navy, marine and coast guard stations.

Figures also show that where bowling is made available to men in the armed forces it is one of the most popular on-post recreations, in the majority of cases supporting itself and providing additional funds for other recreational facilities.

Statistics aren't the most fascinating things in the world, but it may be fairly interesting to learn that the ABC estimates that 6,000,000 men and women between the ages of 40 and 50 are regular bowlers. Five million are found between the ages of 30 and 40, and so on down the age classifications.

The hold bowling has taken throughout the nation is a strong one. There are approximately 70,000 bowling alley beds in 10,000 establishments over the country. This is approximately a 300 per cent increase in the availability of bowling over 1935-36 figures.

From the standpoint of organized bowling, Detroit is the leading city, having one team for 112 persons. Illinois is the leading state with 27,661 teams.

You and the other 15,999,999 bowlers spend $221,000,000 on the game each year, organized bowlers paying $76,250,000 of this amount. The "capital structure of retail bowling establishments," according to the report, amounts to $770,000,000.

Team membership figures were not available, but the ABC estimated there was a reduction of about 15 per cent in that category.

Thief Changes Mind After Debut in Crime

FRANKFORT, IND.—"I thought I wanted to be a thief, but I guess I don't," said a note to a proprietor whose drugstore was burglarized of $50.

Accompanying the note was the $50 and an extra dollar to repair the front-door lock, which the conscience-stricken burglar had broken in gaining entrance.

Lost 141 Days in Australian Wilds

Yankee Sergeant Watches Three Comrades Die.

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS IN AUSTRALIA. — Staff Sergt. Grady Gaston of Frisco City, Ala., is recovering in an army hospital from near starvation, after being lost 141 days in Wild Gulf country in northern Australia and watching three of his companions die.

Gaston and five others survived the forced landing of their Liberator bomber after returning from a raid on a Japanese base in December.

Two of the survivors, Capt. Norman Crosson, Cincinnati, and Sergt. Loy Wilson, were found by searchers 13 days after the forced landing.

Gaston and Co-Pilot Lieut. Arthur Speltz, Albert Lea, Minn.; Bombardier Lieut. John Dyer, Boston; Navigator Lieut. Dale Grimes, Boston, remained lost during days of wandering.

Gaston said the four shot a steer on the third day.

The first to die was Grimes, who was drowned while attempting to cross a stream to reach a passion fruit vine.

"We lived on snakes, fish, and crocodiles, which we had to eat raw because we had no matches to light fires," Gaston related. "By early February my weight had dropped from 168 to 100 pounds.

"On February 10 we decided to make for a nearby water hole. Dyer collapsed. We went on to get water for him, but when we returned he was dead.

"On February 24 Speltz died in his sleep. From then on I lost track of time. Some days I found nothing to eat. Once I fought off a pack of dingoes (wild dogs) which had killed a cow, so I could get some meat.

"I had nearly given up the fight when some black boys found me."

Pet Dog Shuts Icebox, Child Killed at Play

CHICAGO. — Stalked by tragedy since even before his birth, six-year-old Le Roy Barton of 1530 W. Monroe street, died alone in his home.

Fatefully, it was Le Roy's best friend, his dog. Baby, which was responsible for his untimely death. While playing hide and seek with Baby, Le Roy jumped into the icebox. The dog, anxious to find his master, jumped up against the door, slamming it closed.

The boy's mother, Mrs. Oma Barton, was not at home at the time. It was her neighbor, Miss Lucille Niles, who phoned to say that Le Roy was missing. Mrs. Barton hurried home from the club where she is employed as a waitress, and she and Miss Niles started to search the neighborhood. Later, police were summoned. But still there was no trace of Le Roy.

Hours later the two women noticed that there was some untouched food on the back porch. Fearfully the mother ran to the icebox. Her worst fears were realized. For inside lay her son's body. His torn clothing gave mute evidence of his struggle to free himself.

A coroner's jury returned a verdict of accidental death.

Le Roy's father died four months before the boy's birth.

Contractor Refuses to Make Profits on War Work

KANSAS CITY.—J. E. Dunn, Kansas City contractor, doesn't want to make money out of the war, so the government is ahead $400,000 on one big army contract.

Dunn's bid of $1,864,655 last year for contruction of a quartermaster depot at Kansas City was $250,000 below the next lowest bid and he explained to United States army engineers it was his desire to build it at cost. But his profit turned out to be $178,000.

Now he has renegotiated his contract and scaled it down another $158,000. He told engineers he would pay federal taxes and then divide the balance among the Red Cross, USO and other organizations.

Conscience Bothers Man Who Took Relief Checks

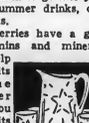
OMAHA, NEB.—Clarence Turpin, 37 years old, figured a clear conscience was worth more than the $48 he said he accepted unfairly in unemployment compensation checks two years ago, so he surrendered to detectives here.

Held for investigation, he told officers he received the money in his home town of Indianapolis.

"I'm not entitled to that money, and I just can't rest until I've been back there to straighten it out," he said. "My conscience won't let me. I accepted the checks after I had found employment."

HOUSEHOLD MEMOS

by Lynn Chambers



Angel Food cake with a fruity icing handles your summer dessert problem effectively but doesn't eat into your sugar ration.

Cooling Off

Fruity desserts for summer lend just the right tartness to the meal and give your menus a nice seasonal note. When fruits and berries are plentiful, plan them to go into your first courses, summer drinks, desserts and snacks.

Fruits and berries have a good store of vitamins and minerals which will help keep your spirits up when the warm weather wants to get you down. Acid fruits such as lemons, grapefruit and oranges alkalize your system and help you keep cooler while fruits and berries coming in season will give a delightful note to your menus.

Cakes, pies and puddings come in for their share of attention when there are fruit and berries on hand. This angel food cake looks mighty pretty served with fresh fruit or berry icing. The eggs, if removed from refrigerator several hours before using, will beat up more lightly and give increased fineness of grain and delicacy of texture to the cake:

Angel Food Cake.
1 cup sifted cake flour
1¼ cups sifted granulated sugar
1¼ cups egg whites (10 to 12 egg whites)
¼ teaspoon salt
1¼ teaspoons cream of tartar
1 teaspoon vanilla
¼ teaspoon almond extract

Sift flour once, measure, add ½ cup sugar, and sift together four times. Beat egg whites and salt with rotary beater or flat wire whisk. When foamy, add cream of tartar and continue beating until eggs are stiff enough to hold in peaks, but not dry. Add remaining sugar, 2 tablespoons at a time, beating after each addition until sugar is blended. Fold in flavoring. Then sift in about ¼ of the flour and fold in lightly. Repeat until all is used. Turn into an ungreased 10-inch angel food cake pan. Cut gently through batter with knife to remove bubbles. Bake in a slow (325-degree) oven, 1 hour or until done. Remove from oven and invert pan 1 hour. Cover with fruit or berry icing.

The repertoire of cherry desserts is an extensive one for there are such things as cherry cobblers, shortcake, pancakes, fritters, roly poly and pie! If you make the pie with this popular prepared cereal crust you will save time, requires no special technique for making:

Cherry Meringue Pie.
Crust:
3 cups oven-popped rice cereal
4 tablespoons sugar
½ cup butter, melted

Roll cereal into fine crumbs; combine with butter and sugar, mixing well. Press mixture evenly, and firmly around sides and bottom of pie tin. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for about 8 minutes. Cool before adding filling.

Lynn Says:

Point Wisdom: If you're parting with more red stamps a month than you should, check up on yourself.

Don't buy meat and neglect other red stamp foods. Space out the stamps just as carefully as you figure out the financial end of things.

Study point values and learn to understand how the system works instead of having the busy butcher explain it to you every time you buy.

Family likes and dislikes are out of place in a wartime budget. Serve low point meats appetizingly cooked.

Buy meats and fats sensibly—as you need them. Buying too much or carelessly storing what you have is sabotage on the home front.

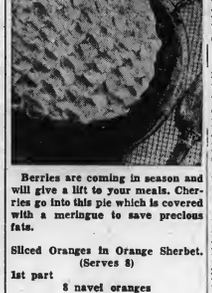
Filling:
3 cups fresh cherries, pitted
1¼ cups sugar
2 tablespoons flour
½ teaspoon salt
2 eggs, separated

Combine pitted cherries, 1 cup sugar, flour, salt and egg yolks. Cook in double boiler until mixture is thickened. Pour into crumb pie shell. Beat egg whites until stiff. Gradually beat in remaining ¼ cup sugar. Spread meringue over pie. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) 12 to 15 minutes until meringue is browned.



Orange Ice Cream.
1 pint scalded milk
2 tablespoons flour
1 cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
2 eggs, separated
Grated rind of 2 oranges
Grated rind of ½ lemon
Juice of 4 large oranges
1 quart light cream

Make a custard of the first four ingredients as follows: Mix flour, sugar, salt, and add milk gradually. Cook over hot water for 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. Take from fire and pour over well-beaten egg yolks, and add grated lemon and orange rind. Return to double boiler and cook until mixture coats the spoon. Strain and cool, then add orange juice, cream and beaten whites of eggs. Freeze. If desired, serve with candied orange peel.

Sliced Pears in Orange Juice.
(Serves 6 to 8)
2½ cups fresh orange juice
2 tablespoons powdered sugar
6 to 8 pears, sliced thin

Sweeten orange juice with powdered sugar and chill well. Fifteen minutes before serving, peel pears, slice thin, and sweeten. Pour juice over the pears, and serve with cookies.

Berries are coming in season and will give a lift to your meals. Cherries go into this pie which is covered with a meringue to save precious fats.

Sliced Oranges in Orange Sherbet.
(Serves 8)

1st part
8 navel oranges
½ cup sugar
1 cup water

2nd part
1 quart water
2 cups sugar
Grated rind of 2 oranges
2 cups orange juice
¼ cup lemon juice

3rd part
1 cup sugar
½ cup water
Whites of 3 eggs.

For the first part, peel oranges and with a sharp knife remove all white membrane. Slice oranges into sections between skins. Boil sugar and water together, let cool, then pour over oranges and let stand in refrigerator.

For second part, boil sugar and water for 5 minutes, add grated orange rind, and juices. Cool and strain. Freeze, in round mold.

Make a meringue for 3rd part by boiling sugar and water for 5 minutes, until it forms a soft ball in cold water. Incorporate a little into the beaten whites of three eggs until all used. Continue to beat for 2 minutes. Cool. Remove top from mold in which orange ice is packed, stir in meringue. Serve in large glass dish with sliced oranges in meringue nest.

NORMAN POWELL, son of Dick Powell and Joan Blondell, is the proudest little boy in Hollywood. He's wearing sergeant's stripes and a decoration. Dick was telling about it on the set of "Riding High," in which he's working with Dorothy Lamour and Victor Moore. Seems Sergeant Elmer Taylor, stationed at Honolulu, who's been a fan of Norman's parents for years, sent the youngster a small set of stripes and a replica of the Purple Heart which the sergeant won.

Joan Crawford has had such an interesting career, carved out by her own ambition and energy as well as her talent, that we can look for her to take another big step forward now that she has changed studios. Somebody said that Bette Davis would have to look to her laurels, with Joan right on the ground, and as willing as Bette is to play unsympathetic parts if they're good ones. Just give Joan a couple of good pictures and she'll have the box office eating out of her hand, as she did in her palmiest days.

Danny Kaye, who will make his film debut in Samuel Goldwyn's "Up in Arms," has accepted an invitation from the Entertainment National Services Assn., Inc., to make a two-month tour of recreational centers in the British Isles and Africa.

Assignments for Susan Hayward are stacking up these days. She's booked to play Loretta Young's younger sister when Paramount makes "And Now Tomorrow," a nice role, and Samuel Bronston has arranged to borrow her to play the wife of Jack London in the film based on London's life, which he'll make for United Artists release. Michael O'Shea will play Jack London.

Sounds incredible, but we're told that Bob Hope's nose, thanks to his wise cracks, has become so famous in England that a promontory near Torquay has been named "Hope's Nose"—that the comedian received the news while he was still at work on "Let's Face It."

George Reeves' nose is sort of famous, too; it's been broken seven times. He's the young man who was snatched out of Westerns to play opposite Claudette Colbert in "So Proudly We Hail!" As for the nose—he was a boxer when he went to Pomona Junior college—won the Golden Gloves heavyweight championship of the city for three years—and his nose was broken seventimes.

A perfect piece of casting took place recently when Ralph Willever was given the role of a sailor in NBC's "Just Plain Bill." That was his first job after he was rescued from a torpedoed troopship off Iceland, and was honorably discharged as a result of disability.

Lionel Barrymore has inherited a distinction that formerly belonged to Joan Crawford; when she left MGM recently, she'd had a continuous contract longer than any other player. Barrymore is starting his 18th year with the studio. His next picture, "Three Men in White," will be his 63rd for Metro.

Years ago, when Rita Hayworth was still a stock player, she reported for work one morning to Seymour Felix to dance as one of 40 girls. "This morning," said he, "I want you to think, act and dance like Marilyn Miller." The other day she arrived for work in "Cover Girl" and heard him giving orders to 40 girls. "This morning," said he, "I want you to think, act and dance like Rita Hayworth."

ODDS AND ENDS—Phil Baker, returning to New York from California, asked how long we've been at war with the Nazis—said out in California they aren't fighting anybody but the Japs . . . Donald Woods, who has received favorable notices for his work in the new picture, "Corregidor," is the same Donald Woods heard as Dr. Leslie Foster on the Sunday broadcasts of "Those We Love" . . . Though Alan Ladd went into uniform immediately after finishing "China," he's receiving 2,000 fan letters per day . . . Ginny Simms is touring desert army camps again, after receiving thousands of letters from the boys she had visited.

DONALDSON, JOHNSON CAN'T BE BOUGHT

(Reprint from the Owensboro Messenger and Inquirer of July 17, 1943)

The trucking interests and their friend, D. C. Moore, of Pikeville, resigned assistant state director of transportation, have rendered Keen Johnson and Lyter Donaldson a distinct service by their "disclosures" of the last few days. They have proved conclusively that neither the Governor nor Mr. Donaldson can be bought.

Moreover, they have told the people of Kentucky that they can depend on Mr. Donaldson to oppose special privileges for this minority group, and that he presumably can be depended upon to oppose them for others. This strengthens the conviction expressed nearly two weeks ago by the Messenger as to Mr. Donaldson's honesty, integrity, and ability to cope with the problems that will confront the next governor of Kentucky. Weaker men might have yielded to the importunities of such a rich and obviously generous organization as the truckers of Kentucky in their quest for favors at the hands of the administration. But neither Lyter Donaldson nor Keen Johnson are weak men. The truckers are not the first group seeking special concessions to learn this.

This newspaper wants the truckers to enjoy all of the rights to which they are entitled. We do not want them to receive favors against the public interest-favors that they obviously sought in vain of the Johnson administration and are still seeking of the next state administration.. Therefore we will watch with interest to see whom the trucking interests support in this campaign, as every other citizen interested in the maintenance of good government in general and our highway system in particular might well do.

It is improbable that the Moore resignation and attacks on Governor Johnson and Lyter Donaldson by both Moore and M. C. Whitney, of Bowling Green, were coincidental. They smack of well-timed steps in a carefully conceived plan to try to defeat Lyter Donaldson for governor, ostensibly in an effort to elect someone who would give the trucking interests what they want—what they were unable to get from the present administration. If the Democratic lectorate of Kentucky can ascertain who this candidate is, it will know whom to be against in the primary.

One Step Closer to VICTORY

Tom and I figure that every War Bond we buy is another step toward Victory — and that all-electric kitchen we've wanted for so long. Of course, our main purpose in buying bonds is to lick the Axis. That comes ahead of everything else. But just the same it's nice to know that when the war's over we'll have a nest egg built up with which to carry out our plans for post-war better living. We're buying bonds to guarantee freedom from oppression today—and freedom from household drudgery tomorrow!

There's a great incentive for making every sacrifice you can today. For after the war, new materials and new production methods now being perfected, will bring finer electrical appliances and better electrical living for everyone.

THE STORY SO FAR: The story of their part in the battle for the Philippines is being told by four of the five naval officers who are all that is left of Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron 3. They are Lieut. John Bulkeley (now Lieutenant Commander), squadron commander; Lieut. R. B. Kelly, second-in-command; and Ensigns Anthony Akers and George E. Cox Jr. The battle for the Philippines was nearly over when the Japs invaded Cebu. Separated from his squadron, Lieut. Kelly had spent the night at the home of an American civilian. When the Japs began their invasion he fought his way back to the dock where Lieut. Bulkeley's boat was tied to learn that he had been reported dead.

CHAPTER XV

"After Cebu fell," explained Cox, "an army aviator arrived—he'd left Cebu that morning. He said he'd talked to a Catholic priest who had said burial mass over you and another sailor, killed in an engagement."

"And I was very glad to hear it," said Kelly. "Because then I knew that Harris and Reynolds had gotten decent burial at the American cemetery in Cebu before the Japs arrived. But then I asked, 'Where's Bulkeley?' You see, the last I saw of him he was tearing around the other side of that Japanese cruiser, trying to draw its fire away from me, so I could get in to polish it off. I thought they'd probably got him. I heard he'd turned up later in Mindanao, but it was just a rumor."

"What actually happened was this," said Bulkeley. "They didn't get me, but three destroyers chased me until dawn, when I pulled away into shallow water, and we tied up under a pier to get some sleep—as I think I said.

"When night came I went on up to Iligan, where I intended to get gas and go on up to Cebu to see what had happened to Kelly, although I was pretty sure he hadn't got out alive. But at Iligan I was met by a radioed order from Wainwright; there were no more torpedoes for the MTB's, so he couldn't let us have any gas. They were needing it all for the planes out to Australia.

"So there we were—stuck at Iligan. I went on over to headquarters at Del Monte to report the battle with the cruiser to General Sharp—certain that the end was before us on the island. We'd be fighting here on Mindanao with rifles to the end. But that morning—it was April 13—General Sharp recalled me in to say he'd just got orders from Melbourne that I was ordered to report to MacArthur immediately on the plane leaving Del Monte that night. For a while I felt rotten.

"Then I figured it another way. If I could get to Australia, I might be able to persuade MacArthur to bring out the rest of the squadron. It looked like it was their only chance. 'I'm going to try to get out all your officers and key men,' he had said. 'I'm not going to let you die in a fox hole with a rifle.' I knew he had believed the MTB's had a great future in the war.

"So I sent word to the rest I would get them flown out if possible, and got aboard the bomber that night. As we left the field, the Japs divebombed it and put one motor out, but we got through."

"He left me in charge," said Akers, "and presently General Sharp sent me up to Lake Lanao in the middle of Mindanao Island on a peculiar mission. They were afraid the Japs might land seaplanes on it and I was to set up defenses there. I was to teach the army how to run the machine guns."

"Cox told me Bulkeley had gone home," said Kelly, "and, thinking I was dead, had made him squadron commander. And I didn't know what to do. There I was—no crew, no boat, no job, while they were busy dismantling the 41 boat, to take it up to Lake Lanao and end the war fighting with the Moros. So I decided I'd better get up to Del Monte and report to Sharp so he could tell Bulkeley I was alive, and send in my report by radio to the States on the scrap with the cruiser and what happened to my boat.

"The General was amazed to see me. 'Bulkeley said you'd been killed in action,' he said. He listened to my report on the battle. 'I'll send you to Kalasungay,' he said, 'near the airfield where the planes come in. But I warn you, there's not too much hope of getting out. There's almost no more gas to refuel the planes at this end, so I doubt that they'll send any more.' I said I was sure we were getting out—MacArthur had told Bulkeley he would do it if it was humanly possible.

"The town was forty-five miles away, and I reported to the army colonel there at noon. He asked me why I was here. 'Waiting transportation to Australia,' I said.

"'No use getting your hopes up,' he said. 'And since I've had no instructions, I assume you're here on a duty status and am going to put you to work.'

"'That's okay,' I said, 'if I don't have to leave the vicinity.'

"'I can't even guarantee that,' he said. "I'm organizing a carabao pack train to Lake Lanao. They're cutting the trail now. I have another man rounding up fifty carabao and drivers. When he gets them, you'll be in charge of leading the pack train.'

"I didn't say much. I figured he and I were in for a showdown. I didn't intend to miss a plane being off herding a bunch of milk cows through a jungle, but I thought there was no use being unreasonable now. After all, fifty carabao was a lot to round up. It would take several days.

"Back at the quarters I found an old navy captain who'd arrived the day before—used to be in charge of the industrial department at Cavite. He listened to my story, and MacArthur's promise, and then said, 'The way it looks, I don't think I'm getting out.' Then he talked about the thirty years he'd spent in the navy, all of them training so he would be useful in case of war, and you could see it was discouraging for him to end like this—apparently forgotten by the country he had wanted to serve. What had his life been for?

"On the night of April 22 my hopes were down. I was fiddling with the radio and cut in on a news broadcast from the States—a short-wave station in San Francisco. It was the navy news release on our fight with the cruiser!

"'Tell him the end here is drawing near.'"

"I went to bed sick as the silky-voiced commentator again repeated his account of our victory, when all out here knew we had only expended ourselves in the hope that it might slow down a Japanese victory, and we had failed even in this.

"Next morning the army colonel sent for me. He'd had a plane-less aviator hard at work who had collected thirty-nine of the fifty carabao. Soon the others would be here, so I was to start work today—a trail-blazing expedition to inspect the jungle path up to Lake Lanao. But suppose a plane came while I was away? I didn't even bring it up; it seemed so hopeless now. I went back to my quarters and had just packed to go when the phone rang. I was to report to General Sharp at the landing field at once, and bring everything I had with me.

"It was grim waiting at the airport. The priority list was made up in Melbourne and each man had a number. A plane would not hold more than thirty, they knew, but more than a hundred were waiting there. Because perhaps two, maybe even three, planes might come. Or perhaps someone whose name was called would not show up, and your number might be high enough on the list to claim his seat. So they waited—all young technicians, most of them aviators, for this last chance to get out, so they could fight again. General Sharp had told me he had telephoned Cox and Akers that they were on tonight's list; why weren't they here?

"At 10:30 the list was called—thirty names, mine and theirs among them, but only I answered present. So they put an army tank major and an air-corps captain in as substitutes, if they failed to arrive. But at 10:35 here they came on the run, so the captain and the major were turned aside. They were to go on the next plane—if there was a next.

"Just before we got aboard, General Sharp came over to tell me good-by. He is a grand old man, all six feet of him, a commanding person and every inch a soldier, as his father and grandfather were before him.

"He said this was probably the last plane out, and he wanted me to take a message to MacArthur. 'Tell him the end here is drawing near, and if help can't be sent, in a few days Mindanao will fall. Of course, probably he understands this, and maybe nothing can be done.'

"Then he talked about us. 'Everybody left here in the islands should realize,' he said, 'that those who are called to Australia are the ones who will be most useful for the work ahead. Those who leave are the men for the job, regardless of rank and years of service. The rest of us,' he said, 'consider ourselves as being expendable, which is something that may come to any soldier. We are ready for it, and I think they will see that we will meet it squarely when it comes.'

"Then they called my name, we shook hands, and I climbed aboard. Each of us who were leaving unstrapped our 45's and handed them out through the plane's windows to the fellows who were staying behind. They'd be needing them badly and we wouldn't."

"And Peggy?" someone asked.

"There were three seaplanes sent out from Australia to Corregidor at the very last," said Kelly, "which, among other people, were to bring out the nurses. One of them was shot down off Corregidor, but the other two loaded and got back to Lake Lanao, where they gassed up for the big homeward hop while Sharp held the Japs back from the lake. One of these two got safely away; the plane Peggy was in cracked up on the take-off. So now we won't ever know.

"But as our big ferry-command bomber swung wide out over the field after the take-off, you could see the island and then the path of moonlight glistening over the water, just as we used to watch it glisten from the tunnel entrance at Corregidor. And suddenly I remembered the last thing she said to me—her voice was just as clear as if it had been two seconds ago, instead of many weeks, over that signal-corps telephone in the army hut on Bataan, after I had told her this was good-by. 'Well,' she said, 'it's been awfully nice, hasn't it?' And her voice had sounded clear and brave, but seemed to come from far away."

ARTHRITIS

A middle-aged patient was referred by her family physician to a rheumatism or arthritis specialist. The specialist listened to her story as to when the symptoms appeared, the nature and degree of the pain, the different kinds of treatment she had received, and finally was told by the patient that she knew that if he operated and opened up the knee joint, she might get better.

Dr. Barton

The physician then quietly pointed out that the pain in the knee was just a symptom of a general disease in her body, that fixing up or giving relief in one joint would not prevent the disease attacking other joints, tendons and muscles, and that if he were to help to relieve her symptoms, it would be necessary for her to follow a certain diat, take certain medicines, and receiva heat and electrical treatment.

What is arthritis? How can the patient or the physician recognize arthritis?

In Archives of Physical Therapeutics, Dr. Ralph Pemberton, Philadelphia, whose work on arthritis I have mentioned before, stated that arthritis is not just a disease of the joints, but a disease of the whole body and its results just happen to be located in the joints. In fact, many patients afflicted with the diseäsa do not have much pain or inflammation in the joints but have pain where the ends of tha muscles are attached to the tendons which mova the bones forming the joint. There may be a small amount of swelling in parts of the body near the joints and both hands may be cold and sweaty.

That arthritis is not a joint disease but a general diseasa is shown by the fact that the symptoms are worse in women at menstruation, pregnancy and the menopause. "These patients stand cold poorly." The underlying cause of arthritis, in tha opinion of Dr. Pemberton, is that there is an imbalance (or lack of adjustment with other parts of tha body) of the central nervous system and the endocrine or ductless glands (thyroid, pituitary, adrenal, sex, and others).

The thought then is that in trying to find the cause of arthritis, the aggravation of the two systems—nervous and gland—in various ways should be remembered. Infection, injury, emotional disturbances, food, cold, and moisture, general fatigue, should all be kept in mind.

Brain Operation For 'Tension' State

There are cases where the pain is not physical, but mental, and these patients suffer untold agony from grief, anxiety, shame and remorse, ungovernable temper and other mental and emotional disturbances. This pain affects their whole routine of life—food, rest, work. If it were not for the sake of their families or loved ones, this mental pain would driva many of them to self destruction.

How can these cases of severe mental pain obtain relief?

For years surgeons have been able to give relief in physical pain by cutting the nerves supplying the sensation in the part affeeted. In the same manner, surgeons are now, in the severe cases of mental pain, removing part of the brain.

In the Bulletin, New York Academy of Medicine, New York, Drs. W. Freeman and J. W. Watts, New York, state that the removal of this part of the brain—the frontal lobes—is past the experimental stage and definite relief from mental and emotional pain is now possible. These physicians have followed all their 136 patients for a period of six years and give the following conclusions.

1. The operation interrupts the connection between the front lobea of the brain and the thalamus (the part of the brain which feels or records certain emotional sensations) which reduces the emotional reactions of the patient. This loss of painful self-consciousness causes the patient to look outward instead of inward.

2. Intelligence is unharmed but self responsibility is decreased so that these patients may become lazy and lack tact. Other patients retain the proper degree of responsibility toward others.

3. Best results are obtained in "tension" states with obsessions, good results in depressions, and fair results in day dreaming states.

Improved Uniform International SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson for August 1

GOD DELIVERS HIS PEOPLE

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 5:22, 23; 6:1-7; 12:51.

GOLDEN TEXT—Call upon me in tha day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.—Psalm 50:15.

Why doesn't God do something? People are quick to ask such a question in a time of crisis. Today they want to know why God permits tha war to go on. In the day of our lesson Moses wanted to know why God did not deliver His people from Egypt. He and Aaron had been appointed of God to lead them out, but their first efforts only met with failure and increased persecution.

The complaint of Moses, and the response of God make an instructive story for our consideration and guidance. It will answer our questions.

I. Moses Said, "Thou Hast Not Delivered Thy People" (Exod. 5:22, 23).

When the efforts of Moses brought heavier burdens on the people they blamed him and Aaron for making their situation worse. This sorrow and shame made them doubt God's calling and commission. How quickly men are discouraged in their purpose to serve God.

The people were wrong in their attitude. They should have been patient. They ought not to have assumed that the loss of the first skirmish meant the loss of the whole campaign.

Are we not just like them? The new minister or the recently elected Sunday school superintendent makes a mistake and instead of helping him to pick up the pieces and start over, we decida that he just will not do, that we must have a change.

Even though the peopla were wrong, however, the man of God should not have lost his faith and accused God of failure to keep His promise. He was supposed to have learned the lesson of patience in the long years on the backside of the desert. Had he forgotten the experience of the burning bush?

II. God Said, "I Am Jehovah, Thou Shalt See What I Will Do" (Exod. 6:1-7).

In other words, Moses was to remember that he was dealing with the Eternal One, unchangeable, and always true to His word and able to make His will coma to pass.

So often men in dealing with God think of Him in terms of their own weakness and failure. What we need is to have a Godlike conception of God, not a manlike idea of Him. God is the infinite and Eternal One with whom we have no right to quarrel, and whose dealings with us are too high for us to judge (Ps. 139:1-6).

God's covenant with His people was established (v. 4). He had heard their cry (v. 5) and His deliverance was sure (v. 6). The only thing Moses had to do was to wait and see God work.

That word "wait" is a little one. It seems to call for no effort, to be easy of fulfillment; yet it seems to be the hardest thing for a human beíng to do. Men who carry the burden of active warfare with ease and with honor become discouraged and sick when they must sit in a prisoner's concentration camp and wait for deliverance.

Christians who can speak and work for God when things are active and moving become querulous and despondent when they have to wait for something to happen, or when they are laid aside for a time.

His promise is sure. That is not just a religious sentiment. It is a fact, and it is proved by history. Note that in the case of Moses—

III. History Said, "It Came to Pass the Selfsame Day" (Exod. 12: 51).

Moses had to take God's word, for "the selfsama day," which we read here came later. It came in God's own time, after He had, through Moses, humiliated and broken tha hard will of Pharaoh. Then He gave His people the great memorial feast of the Passover, teaching tham the needed lesson that redemption is by the shedding of blood.

In that night Jehovah did bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt. That deliverance was as certain the day He made the first promise to Abraham (v. 3, and Gen. 12:1-3) hundreds of years before, as it was now that it had been accomplished.

History is really God's story, revealing His outworking of His plan for mankind. The torn and blotted pages are man's handiwork. Sin and unbelief have caused him to hinder the work of God, but God is not defeated, and in the midst of man's self-created chaos, He proceeds quietly to work out His own purpose.

The many prophecies of Scripture which have been fulfilled not only prove its divine inspiration, but demonstrate its dependability. Every promise of God is "yea and amen" in Christ (II Cor. 1:20, 21). We can count on that!

CHATTERER GETS SAMMY JAY SOME CORN

IN ALL his life Chatterer the Red Squirrel never had felt so angry and so helpless. He had thought himself so smart that he could outwit Sammy Jay, and, instead Sammy had outwitted him. This was bad enough in itself, but to make matters worse he had got to do something which he felt was very dangerous. He had got to go get Sammy some corn from Farmer Brown's corncrib right in broad daylight, and there was Black Pussy sitting on the doorstep of Farmer Brown's house and Farmer Brown's Boy himself chopping wood close by the corncrib. But if he didn't keep his promise Sammy would go tell Shadow the Weasel where he was living, and Chatterer was more afraid of Shadow than of Black Pussy and Farmer Brown's Boy. Wasn't it a terrible position to be in? Chatterer thought so. And all the time he knew that it was all his own fault. If he hadn't been so greedy and tried to scare Sammy Jay away from the corncrib, he wouldn't be in such a fix now.

He ran along the stone wall to the end on the edge of Farmer Brown's dooryard. Then he peeped out. Black Pussy was dozing on the doorstep. Her eyes were closed. Chatterer started across for the tree close by the corncrib, and then his courage failed and he ran back to the stone wall. Three times he did this, and each time he looked up to see Sammy Jay grinning at him from an apple tree in the Old Orchard. It was very plain to see that Sammy was enjoying Chatterer's fright. Chatterer almost cried with fear and anger.

The fourth time he gritted his teeth and kept on, running as fast as he knew how. He was almost past Black Pussy, when she opened her eyes. In a flash she was after him. Chatterer reached the tree first and was up it like a little red flash. There he felt safe. At least he felt safe from Black Pussy, for she wouldn't dare follow him out on the small branches. But Farmer Brown's Boy had seen her rush.

"What are you interested in, Puss?"

"What are you so interested in, Puss?" asked Farmer Brown's Boy. He couldn't see Chatterer because Chatterer was smart enough to keep on the other side of the tree trunk. "Is it something you want me to see?" he continued, and started to walk over to the tree. Chatterer's heart was beating terribly with fright—thump, thump, thump! At just that minute there was a great racket over in the Old Orchard. "Thief! thief! thief!" screamed Sammy Jay, making a great fuss. Farmer Brown's Boy turned to look in that direction.

"I wonder if that fox is prowling around again," said he. And, while he was still looking and wondering, Chatterer dropped to the roof of the corncrib and slipped inside through the hole he had found under the edge of the roof. He gave a great sigh of relief.

"I believe Sammy Jay did that purposely to make Farmer Brown's Boy look over there instead of up in the tree," he muttered. And he was right. Sammy had no desire to have any real harm come to Chatterer, and so at just the right minute he had fooled Farmer Brown's Boy.

When Farmer Brown's Boy was sure that Reddy was not over in the Old Orchard he once more turned to Black Pussy, who was still glaring up at the place where Chatterer had been. He looked up, too, but of course, there was no one to be seen.

"I guess you must have dreamed you saw something, Puss," said he, stooping to stroke her gently. Then he went back to his wood chopping. Chatterer watched his chance and got back to the old stone wall safely with his cheeks stuffed full of corn for Sammy Jay.

FOR GOOD STATE GOVERNMENT, PRESENT and FUTURE

Vote for

WILLIAM H. MAY for LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

Kenneth E 'Jack' Johnson

Democratic Candidate For State Representative

A Democrat Administration was elected to office in the United States of America in 1932. Immediately in direct contrast to policies desperately tried and that had so meserably failed in re-scueing the nation from the doldrums of the worst depression this country has ever known; there was a complete reversal and right about face in National policies started by the incoming administration that brought the nation up to a phase of American History that is without precedent or paralled

Government agencies were started and the people of the nation need not be told of their success, because time proved that a Democrat Administration had found a remedy for our depression maladies and we were again well on the road to more prosperous times.

Our utilities and various Corporations thru Government aid were once more established in the business world and regained the same positions they enjoyed before the depression.

There was great demand for expansion of our utilities, especially those in the power and lighting field. Influential citizens responding and joining with the farmers of our rural sections of the nation, made a survey as to the potentialities and benefits to be derived from electrification of our rural communities. Their findings and demands for rural electrification were turned down by the power and lighting utilities and thus the R. E. A. was born.

By appropriation the Congress of the United States made Rural Electrification possible and today there are ribbons of copper reaching from hilltop to hilltop, pole to pole, home to home, all over the nation and I know for a certainty that our rural communities are enjoying the same conveniences that light and power have brought to our towns and cities.

Did the utilities make this possible over the rural sections of our nation?

Did the utilities make this possible over the rural communities of Boone and Gallatin counties? (You know the answer).

I want to go on record here and now and say to the farmers and their families in rural communities of Boone and Gallatin counties that the lines of the R. E. A. which stand like sentiuls over the country-side, made possible by the Congress of our country for the benefit and convenience of us all, are here to stay and we'll keep it's management and personnel as it is today. No greater boom to the people of our rural communities has ever been attempted before in Boone and Gallatin counties and is the result of the alertness and farsightedness of citizens of our two counties in this prominent district who helped make Rural Electrification possible.

There are dangers (dormant now) that are beginning to crop out and there are utilities that are waiting and watching for the opportunity to grab or absorb our whole R. E. A. setup and cut it in with their lines.

I helped wire many of the houses in the rural sections of Boone and Gallatin counties and I know the benefits that have been derived from wiring installations that were made in these homes and I'm ready to fight and help keep it where it belongs.

Your Government and mine made Rural Electrification a reality, and I want you to know that when I'm elected to serve as your next State Representative I'll make every effort, and do everything in my power to promote, protect, and preserve this government agency intact for the benefit of our rural communities here in Boone and Gallatin counties.

I still stand four square on the pledge I have made to the Electorate of Boone and Gallatin counties and will be ever constant in those purposes.

TO THOSE DURABLE PATRIOTS

...Our Passengers

WE of the Greyhound family hold a firm admiration for our passengers. For when it comes to bearing up, when war travel emergencies and problems are bearing down, they're 100 proof . . . 100 per cent! In fact, as a group they are the most cooperative, most cheerfully indulgent folks it's been our good fortune to know. Fewer conveniences have made no rift in our long and pleasant travel relationship. They accept wartime conditions as they are . . . relinquish their good American prerogative to travel how, when and where they please, all in the cause of Victory. Greyhound passengers are flying their true colors every day that rolls around . . . and they can depend upon Greyhound to do its level best by them, to prove worthy of their continued good will and loyalty.

County Housewives Urged To Increase Daily Fat Salvage

One tablespoon of waste household fats saved every day by each of Boone County's 2,839 families during the second year of the WPL fat salvage campaign would provide enough glycerin to make 126,672 anti-aircraft sheels, it was estimated today by the largest single collector of this vitally-needed war material.

"Although only a fraction of this amount has been saved daily by the average family," said T. A. Connors, head of the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company's national meat department, "the steady increase in contributions is very encouraging. During May and June housewives turned in at our company stores as much waste fat as they did during the drive's four opening months, and our total collections for the year were more than 4,000,000 pounds."

Indications are that nationwide results of the campaign's initial year, ending the first week in July, totalled more than 65,000,000 pounds of household fats, based on OWI reports for the first eleven months. This is one-third of the annual quota for the nation of 200,000,000 pounds.

Kentucky is asked by the government to salvage 202,000 pounds of fats each month.

Thorne Wheat Gives Highest Yield

Thorne wheat has given the highest yield in the past five years experimental work according to the College of Agriculture. The five year average yields of the varieties tested are as follows: Thorne 43.3 bushels, Ky. No. forty seven variety 39.7 bushels, Trumbul 39 bushels, and Bluestm 38.3 bushels.

Thorne wheat has brown chaff, red kernels and is beardless.

Balbo rye is the outstanding grazing rye developed to date.

Farmers desiring to sow the best in the much needed winter cover crop seeds should secure their seeds now according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. The farmer who waits to the last minute to seure seed stock usually has to take what he can get. Seed of higher producing varieties costs a little more but takes no more labor to seed or harvest. Get your seed at the earliest possible date.

35,000 Pounds of Vetch Received for Distribution to A. C. Cooperators.

35,000 pounds of Vetch has been received for distribution to A. C. Cooperators. It is being handled by Gulley & Pettit, Burlington, Kentucky and Walton & Readnour, Walton, Kentucky. It is handled on the same plan as last year, as grant of aid material. The deduction rate for the Vetch is $12.30 per 100 pounds if the germination test is 90% or better, and $11.60 per 100 pounds if the germination test is 80 to 90%. The credit rate for seeding Vetch is $2.00 per acre and if it is turned or disced under the following spring, an additional $2.00 per acre is given. If it is allowed to fall down on the ground unharvested the credit is $1.00 per acre.

The minimum seeding rate is 15 pounds per acre, but it is preferable to sow it heavier, and it is recommended that from 20 to 30 pounds per acre be sown in addition to wheat, rye, barley or winter oats. To receive credit toward earning soil-building allowance, commercial innoculation must be used unless it can be shown that the ground is already innoculated for Vetch.

Vetch has given the greatest return as a soil-building crop for the amount of labor and money invested, of any of our soil-builders. It should be seeded by the latter part of September for best results.

Cannery Needs Women Workers

The Walton Cannery will open this week according to John Woods, Manager. The cannery this year, from all indications, will face an acute labor shortage of women workers, and from 25 to 30 men workers.

The cannery works from 115 to 150 women preparing the tomatoes for canning. This is one of the most important war jobs in the food production program to date. The Army takes all the canned crops until their quota is supplied. Tomatoes are one of the most important high vitamine foods used by the military forces.

The minumin wage rate at the cannery is 30 cents per hour for all tomatoes above four buckets prepared per hour. All men or women who are not now fully employed should contact Mr. Woods at the cannery. The county farm labor assistant working out of the county agent's office plans to assist in recruiting help for this important job.

Coupons In Gasoline Ration Books Must Be Endorsed By Users

Motorists and all other gasoline users were reminded today by R. E. Brugh, chairman of the Boone County War Price and Rationing Board, that all the coupons in their gasoline books must be endorsed immediately.

Coupons in new books issued after July 22 should be endorsed on the face of the coupon soon as they are received from the War Price and Rationing Board, R. E. Brugh said. In addition, users should write endorsements immediately on any coupons now in their possession or received before July 22.

In the past it has not been necessary to write notations on coupons until they were actually used to buy gas.

Immediate endorsements are required under a new OPA amendment both as a convenience to the public and as a help to OPA investigators in checking misuse of ration coupons falling into the hands of persons not entitled to them, the board chairman pointed out.

"Under the new plan the motorist by spending a few minutes endorsing his coupons all at once will save delay and trouble when he goes to a filling station to buy gasoline," said R. E. Brugh.

"The new requirement also means greater protection to the motorist whose book is lost or stolen, since the finder or theif will not be able to pass off the coupons as his own by writing in his own license number," the chairman added. "By cooperating in making these endorsements promptly the rightful holders of a gasoline ration will be rendering invaluable assistance to OPA in its job of detecting and preventing a black market in gasoline and gasoline coupons. Endorsements make it possible to distinguish the coupons that have been properly used from those that have been obtained by theft, conterfeiting, and illegal purchase, and put into unlawful use by black market operators. Individuals who endorse these coupons will thus help OPA see that gasoline is distributed and used in a fair and equitable manner."

R. E. Brugh called attention to the fact that whenever a motor vehicle registration number is changed, this change must be noted by the War Price and Rationing Board or state registration official, on the front cover of the book. The coupons bearing the old number may then be used without change.

With the exception of "E" and "R" coupons, the information to be noted on gasoline coupons will remain the same as previously:

1. In the case of "A", "B", "C", "D", "T-1" or "T-2" books, the license number and the state of registration of the vehicle are to be written on the face of the coupon, except that in the case of interchangeable coupon books isued for official or fleet vehicles, the information shall be the official or fleet designation (or the Certificate or War Necessity number in the case of commercial vehicles not operating under fleet designation), and the state or city or town in which the principal office of the fleet operator is located.

2. In the case of "E" and "R" books, the name and address, as it appears on the cover of the book, should be endorsed on the coupons. However, "E" and "R" books, unlike the others, need not be endorsed immediately, but may be endorsed at the time the gasoline is purchased. Where gasoline is purchased in bulk lots and is delivered to the premises of the "E" or "R" ration-holder, no endorsement at all is required. Where delivery is made to the purchaser at a filling station, bulk station, or any place except the buyer's premises, the coupons must be endorsed.

NOTICE

We wish to take this opportunity to thank our many customers for their patience and indulgence during the period of storms Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of last week. We fully realize the inconvenience, loss of time and food occasioned by the electric service interruptions during that period. The unusual length of time that some sections were without service was caused by transformers being destroyed by lighting and by trees blown across the lines. We are indeed sorry that we were unable to do a speedier job of restoring service but the storm extended over the entire distribution system in Boone, Grant, Kenton and Pendleton Counties and we were compelled to repair the trouble as best we could with the present manpower shortage.

4-H Club Projects Visited In County

The boys in nine of the ten 4-H Clubs in the county have been visited during the past thirty days and the projects are in very good conditions, according to O. D. Perkinson, Assistant Co. Agent.

With very few exceptions the club members are doing more than they had signed up to do in the spring. One eleven year old boy who had signed up to do 150 hours of chores for his parents had already done 275 hours. Several who started out to take gardening have added a pig and in some instances a flock of 50 chickens. This help is appreciated by the club members parents. There are many cases when the gardens would not have been planted, much less cared for, had not the boys taken over. Many farms are so rushed with other work that they feel they can not spare the time to care for the gardens.

Every member contacted has expressed himself as planning to exhibit something at the 4-H Fair.

Miss Addie Norman, competent employee of the John R. Coppin Co. and sister, Miss Tina Norman of Covington, spent several days last week with their relatives, Mrs. Virgie Norman, Mr. and Mrs. Claude Norman and daughter Judith of Walton.

Mussolini's Exit Marks End of an Era For Fascism; Italy Ponders New Setup; Reds Continue Strong Westward Drive; WMC Rule Effects 'Super Critical' Jobs

Seated at right, General Cotti-Forcinari, commander of the Napoli division of the Italian army in Sicily, fell as prisoner of war to the advancing British army. Allied armies finally encountered stiff resistance in the northeastern area.

MUSSOLINI:
No Caesar

Biggest news story of the war—that was Benito Mussolini's resignation as Italy's prime minister and strong man for 21 years. Taking his place was Fascism's shadow, Marshal Pietro Badoglio, avowedly Mussolini's bitter enemy, yet the builder of his armies and his conqueror of Ethiopia.

Mussolini left the scene with Italy's empire lost; with Axis armies pocketed in the northeastern corner of Sicily by Allied forces, and with the Italian mainland afire from bombs. As he left, King Victor Emmanuel called on all Italians to stand firm in the most fateful hour of the country's destiny. Italy again will find the road of the future, he said.

Twenty-one years ago, Mussolini took over the Italian government following a march of 8,000 of his Blackshirts on Rome. Italy writhed in disorder, her industries crippled from strikes, and her unemployed war veterans in riot. In the crisis, King Victor turned to Mussolini, and thus did the strong man come to power.

He restored order. He created public works and set up the corporate state, in which all economic groups are represented in government. He settled papal claims to the amount of 93 million dollars and recognized the Vatican's sovereignty. But it was over empire that Mussolini stumbled.

Take Up Last Line

At the beginning of the final stage of resistance in Sicily, the Axis line roughly ran from the east coast port of Catania westward to the mountains, and then curved northward to the shores of the Tyrrhenian sea.

Near Catania, strong Axis forces held firm after early tank battles had failed to pierce their lines. To the west, Canadian troops picked their way through rugged terrain to advance on the Axis outpost of Regalbuto, which huddles behind mountainous ranges.

After seizing the big Sicilian port of Palermo, Gen. George S. Patton's American Seventh army drove westward along the Tyrrhenian coast toward the last Axis defenses defending Messina, which lies at the extreme tip of the island, two miles from the Italian mainland.

German attempts to reinforce Axis troops in Sicily by means of giant Junkers and Merseberg three- and six-engined transport planes met stiff opposition from the Allies.

RUSSIA:
Reds Press In

With three columns driving in from the north, east and south, and another force swinging wide to the west to cut off the rear, Russian armies tightened their hold on the German held bulge of Orel.

The westwardly driva threatened the railroad linking Orel with the great Nazi supply base of Bryansk. Severance of the line meant interruption in tha flow of supplies being shunted to German troops stubbornly resisting the Reds' three-cornered drive on Orel.

While the Russians pressed slowly against German defenses at Orel, the Nazis told of a massive Red offensive south of Lake Ladoga on the Finnish front and below Leningrad. The Germans also said strong Russian attacks at Novorossisk in the northwestern Caucasus had been repelled.

SOUTHWEST PACIFIC:
Jungle Fighting

Working their way through jungle brush, American doughboys braved hidden Japanese machine gun outposts to advance within range of the enemy's main perimeter of defenses around the strategic airfield of Munda in the Solomon islands.

As the troops crept closer to their objective, the U. S. air force continued furnishing heavy support, dive-bombers roaring in to pound the Japs' nest of wooden and earthen pill boxes.

In New Guinea, Liberator and Mitchell bombers gave Salamaua a going over, dropping 250 tons of explosives in two days. As the air force softened up this important enemy base, Allied ground troops fought off Jap patrols to advance eastward to the town.

MANPOWER:
'Super-Critical'

Over and above the 3,000 jobs that the War Manpower commission has designated essential, it has prepared a list of "super-critical" occupations for which draft boards will be asked to give especial consideration, WMC Chairman Paul V. McNutt announced.

The new "super-critical" list will not replace tha old list, McNutt explained, but rather will be given preferential ranking above it. Draft boards will not be ordered to exempt workers in the "super-critical" occupations because the boards hava this power under law.

The new "super-critical" classification followed WMC plans for allowing workers to transfer to other plants to receive higher pay for the same jobs.

HARVEST:
Production Down

Despite unfavorable spring weather, the nation's farmers have all but completed their harvesting of spring wheat, being but only one week behind normal schedule, according to federal crop statisticians. But as of July 1, total production for 1943 was estimated at 790 million bushels against 981 million last year.

Only in Illinois, Indiana and Ohio did harvesting fall back to any extent. Through Oklahoma, Texas and Kansas the wheat was cleaned up according to schedule, and work in Nebraska and Missouri progressed favorably.

Estimations of the winter wheat harvesting showed Kansas with a crop of 150 million bushels, against 206 million last year; Nebraska with 53 million against 68 million; Oklahoma with 32 million against 57 million, and Texas with 33 million against 47 million. Illinois with 17 million against 12 million was credited with the biggest advance over last year.

RATIONING:
Mark Up Butter

To keep purchases in line with supplies, the point value of butter was raised by 2 to 10 points per pound for the period ending September 4, the Office of Price Administration announced. The action followed civilian purchases in excess of allotments during tha last few months.

Housewives switching to other fats will be able to obtain shortening, lard and cooking and salad oils at one point less. Margarine remains unchanged at four points.

BOMBERS:
Strike Nazi Industry

Heavy round-the-clock raids on Hitler's European fortress got under way again with a U. S. raid on the Nazis' Norwegian submarine port of Trondheim and a neighboring aluminum plant.

No sooner had the bombers alighted than fresh squadrons took off, this time for northern Germany. The RAF pointed bomber noses toward the great North sea port of Hamburg and dropped 2,300 tons of explosives. Another British force struck hard at the gigantic Krupp arms works at Essen.

Following in the wake of the British, U. S. airmen worked over Hamburg in daylight. Continuing the concentrated assault on German industry, other formations plastered rubber factories at Hanover and the Focke-Wulfe aircraft assembly plant at Warnemuende. Shipyards were hit at the German naval station of Kiel.

Almost 60 Allied planes were lost in the raids, the bombers encountering heavy anti-aircraft fire to a height of from 20,000 to 35,000 feet, and fleets of fighters.

The American home front's tremendous effort is best grasped by congressional appropriations for U. S. war spending for the next 12 months.

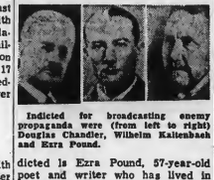
Approximately 88 billion dollars was appropriated for expenditure on tanks, planes, guns, etc., and for the purchase of food, etc., for our embattled allies. In the fiscal year ended last June, 72 billion dollars was spent for war purposes.

Besides the 88 billion dollars for the war, an additional seven billion dollars was appropriated for other government expenditure. Of the total amount, three billion dollars will be used for payment of interest on the public debt, which amounted to 140 billion dollars last June.

All told, government expenditures have been estimated at 95 billion, 330 million dollars for the next 12 months, greater than the total national income in peak years of prosperity.

WHEAT:
Stocks for Feed

Feeling that the present corn shortage is the gravest emergency facing the country, and that any future civilian wheat scarcity can be met out of Canada's record production, the Commodity Credit corporation has determined to raise practically all limits on its sales of wheat for feeds.



Under tha new regulation made in agreement with the War Food administration, only 30 days trade and 90 days feeders inventories will be held. The CCC had 215 million bushels of grain with which to start the program, and it was expected that stocks would be augmented by purchases of excess elevator supplies. Since wheat generally was selling above the CCC loan rate, it was not thought that stocks could be built from this source.

At the same time, CCC divulged it was seeking to import additional grain from Canada by rail. Approximately 154 million bushels ara to be shipped over the Great Lakes. Coastal shipment from Canada to American Pacific ports also was being sought.

TREASON:
Broadcasters Named

Eight American citizens charged with broadcasting Axis propaganda from Germany and Italy were indicted by a federal grand jury for treason. To secure the indictment, the government presented phonograph recordings of talks, and acquaintances identified their voices.

Among the eight, six of the accused are native American citizens and two are naturalized citizens of German birth. Most prominent of those indicted is Ezra Pound, 57-year-old poet and writer who has lived in England, France and Italy since 1911. Ha was said to be the only one of the group broadcasting from Italy.

Three of the group, including a woman, were former newspaper reporters. According to the indictments, the broadcasts included denunciation of communism and the Jews, criticism of the American war program, and praise of Germany and Italy.

STRIKE:
Test New Law

First test of the new congressional anti-strike law came with a Pennsylvania grand jury's indictment of 30 United Mine Workers local officials and members for conspiring and acting to interrupt production in government-held pits. Conviction on the charges would make the defendants liable to fines up to $5,000 or sentences up to a year in jail.

GERMAN-ITALIAN ANTAGONISM

With the invasion of Sicily, the question of whether Germany and Italy can pull together as a team now becomes something much more than a subject of amusing wisecracks. The basic hostility always existing between them—both the armies and the people—may now prove to be the fatal fault in the Axis.

United States diplomats and newsmen who lived interned in Italy until May, 1942, recall many an expression of Italian resentment against the Germans.

On the night before the interned Americans left Rome to return to the U. S., a group of newspapermen, including Richard G. Massock of the Associated Press, visited a restaurant called Biblioteca, which had been a favorite haunt for most of them before the days of internment. The place was packed, largely with Germans, but when the head waiter recognized them, he hustled some diners off, to make room for his old American friends.

An Italian at the next table mumbled something about Germans intruding, whereupon AP's Massock spoke up: "We are not Germans!" "Excuse me," said the Italian, indicating clearly that to call a man a German is a fighting word.

This prompted another Italian to come to Massock, the first American he had seen for months. With an affectionate embrace, he said: "Please give my kind regards to President Roosevelt!"

TANKS AND POTATOES

The army doesn't like to say too much about it, but the United States now has an embarrassment of riches with respect to tanks. A year ago, and for at least a year before that, there was great clamor about speeding production of this weapon with which Hitler overran the continent.

However, both the invasion of Sicily and raids over Germany now make it apparent that the weapon with which we shall take back the continent is not the tank but the plane.

Tanks were needed for the campaign in North Africa, and a year ago they were the most important weapon in the arsenal in preparation for the landing of November 8.

But fewer tanks were expended in North Africa than had been expected, and we still have most of those which were sent to that theater. Further, there will be less demand for tanks in Europe than in Africa, because of shorter distances and less mobility.

A tank factory closed down in Ohio last week, a fact which normally would have caused great alarm. But it passed almost unnoticed because of the fact that we now have miles of tanks standing in line waiting to be used in whatever theater may require them.

Note: Claude Wickard says that tanks are like potatoes. A few months ago everybody clamored for them. Now they are a glut on the market.

NAZI AIR STRENGTH

Air force experts are commenting on the fact that German air activity is stiffer in every theater of the European war. More German planes have been rushed to Italy, are also active on the Russian front, and are more activa over the European continent in combating Allied bomb raids than at any previous time in the war.

Experts believe tha Germans have put up all their air strength. This is highly significant, for it means they have taken everything they have, leaving no reserves.

Thus every loss inflicted on the Luftwaffe in any of these theaters represents a decline from tha minimum required for a defense of the continent. And when you cut a force below its necessary minimum, you are bringing about its downfall.

For many months now, government offices and conference rooms, no matter how they might echo with glowing reports from the home or the battle front, have never been quite free from a ghost. It hovers in the corner and sends chills down every spine—it is the ghost of Old Man Inflation, trying to come back to the scene of his crimea in the roaring twenties.

The Office of War Information has just issued a warning that this specter may appear in his most frightful form if we are not careful. The fat pay envelope is the inflation danger you hear most about. But there is a worse one, namely, a farm land boom. So far, there has been no spectacular rise in farm land prices but a dangerous trend has been discovered in some states and the bureau of agricultural economics is decidedly worried. Here are some figures.

Up 20 Per Cent

As of March 1 of this year, increases in farm land values over those of tha previous year were 20 to 24 per cent.

In September, 1941, I wrote in these columns:

"Money to burn!

"And the burning question is how to stop tha conflagration before it starts. The chief danger is another prairie fire of farm land speculation such as started in Iowa in World War I . . . Today, two years after the present war started, farm land prices are up 1 per cent . . ."

Remember, that was written in September, 1941. Well, steps were taken to prevent speculation then and they met with success. However, as wa have seen by comparing figures, land prices in some states have now increased considerably. That is a natural for much has happened since 1941. In 1942, as the Office of War Information points out, "for the first time in 20 years, the annual average of farm prices reached parity with other prices." Since the outbreak of the war, tha average of farm prices has risen more than 90 per cent, and farm income by about 80 per cent while the average prices paid by farmers, including interest and taxes, has increased about 25 per cent.

Farm income was around 19 billion dollars in 1941—it will be about 23 billion for 1943.

That means, of course, that the farmer has money to spend and it is natural that land values would rise to some degree. As I said, they have gone up as high as 24 per cent in some states and less than 6 per cent in only six states. Those figures, says the bureau of agricultural economics "bear watching"! It is also reported that bankers in some parts of the Middle West believa that in some cases, tha land values have risen beyond their real worth based on the long-time earning capacity of the land. That, if it is true, of course means that right now some farmers are buying land that won't pay for itself.

It is reasonable to suppose that they are not members of that unhappy group of 85,000 farm owners who met Old Man Inflation before and who lost their property under foreclosures in the decade that ended in 1939. If they are, they deserve to suffer again. But the unfortunate thing is that when the farmer loses, the rest of the country does, too. We have struggled through minor industrial panics, as we used to call them, but when the farm goes, it means that things are in such a way that there is no stopping until everybody touches bottom.

Campaign Worked in '41

The articla which I wrote in 1941 reported a meeting here in Washington of mortgage bankers, insurance people, farm organization representatives and others who were urged by the Farm Credit administration to make normal appraisals of land. Apparently they did a pretty good job. Meanwhile, an educational campaign was started urging the farmer, instead of rushing out and buying land with the first money he got as income increased, to pay off his debts. It was gratifying to see the results. In the next year (1942) the net reduction of mortgages was 360 million dollars as against an average of 120 million reduction over the three preceding years. Of course, there is nothing Old Man Inflation hates worse than seeing debts paid up.

Another thing which has helped the present situation is the fact that the farmers who are buying land now usually put up a large initial cash payment. In other words, they are avoiding future debts and that is another thing, of course, which is equally unpleasant to Old Man Inflation.

There is nothing to stop the farmer from speculating in land if he wants to, buying on a margin the way the gamblers used to do on the stock exchange. Now such transactions are considerably limited by law but there is no law to keep a farmer from gambling if he doesn't know any better.

'Psychology for The Fighting Man'

I have just been reading a little booklet called "Psychology for the Fighting Man." It is ona of those books published primarily for the soldiers, and every soldier able to read, ought to have it. It has 20 chapters, each written by a well-known psychologist or expert in his line. Any chapter can be read separately and they are all highly interesting. Familiarity with them will make any man a better soldier and a better leader. The chapter on mobs is only ona. It tells how and why mobs form, what starts a panic and how to stop one.

But here are a few of the other topics I found exceedingly interesting:

Psychology and combat
Seeing in the dark
Color and camouflage
Food and sex as military problems
Differences among races and peoples and many others.
Simply-told psychology.

In this war, a man needs all the helps of that kind that he can get for the contrast between army life and civilian life is greater than ever.

This book, "Psychology for the Fighting Man," is put out by a nonprofit corporation — the Infantry Journal, here in Washington. It costs only a quarter. It is for the soldier, sailor, private or general, ensign or admiral. And it would be a good idea for a lot of next of kin to read this book, too. It might help them to understand what the soldier is up against.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

The annual consumption of gasoline on highways, which has a bearing on rubber consumption, jumped from 8,500,000,000 gallons in 1925 to 22,000,000,000 gallons in 1940. Some figures to keep in mind when gasoline shortage is mentioned today.

In general, guayule rubber has the same qualities and characteristics as plantation tree rubber, except that it has a high resin content, about 20 per cent, compared with 4 per cent in tree rubber.

The first manufacture of rubber footwear outside of the United States took place in 1856 in Scotland.

And the forty-two thousand men and women of the Southern Railway System are proudly doing this job. Doing it right, too . . . for we know what "The Boss" is doing for us.

In appreciation, we're giving him first call on all the equipment and services of the Southern.

In appreciation, we're putting everything we have—all our skill and determination and energy—into the job of keeping the wheels rolling under the heaviest, most important transportation load in all the long history of the Southern.

Report of Covington Sabbath School

In Memory of WILLIAM C. RYLE

Its seems especially fitting that I should pause in this report for a few moments, to place my tiny pedal of rememberance at the foot of the mountain of tribute, under which Bro. Ryle sleeps this morning.

I think never was the intimate kinship of joy and sorrow more clearly revealed than by the sudden passing of our assistant supt. beloved by all of us.

And yet if our faith means anything at all, we should not be overly sad, rather we should rejoice in the splendor of his example, and be grateful for the inspiration and hope which his life leaves for the entire Sabbath School.

As I see the unbroken row of sevens on the class card after his name, signifying the habit of daily fortifing his mind with the truths of the Bible I am better able to understand the calmness and the faith with which he faced that great change which must come to all of us.

Death is a daily occurance it visits every little hamlet and every street. But sceldom does one leave this world who will be missed as we miss him, and so, except this bit of verse in his memory almost as tho I were speaknig his creed when I say:—

To live as gently as I can,
To be, no matter where, a man;
To take what comes of good or ill
And cling to faith and honor still.
To do my best, and let that stand
The record of my brain and hand;
And then, should failure come to me,
Still work and hope for victory.

To have no secret place wherein
I stoop unseen to sin or shame;
To be the same when I'm alone
As when my every deed is known.
To live undaunted, unafrald
Of any step that I have made;
To be without pretense of sham
Exactly what men think I am.

To play my little part nor whine,
That greater honors are not mine.
This, I believe, is all I need
For my philosophy and creed.

Viola Hartzil, Secy., Covington Sabbath School.

YOUR ELECTRIC REFRIGERATOR is working harder than ever now

MIDSUMMER heat means extra duty for your electric refrigerator. The hotter the weather, the longer and harder it works to protect your perishables and provide you with extra quantities of ice cubes, frozen desserts and cold drinks.

No matter how high the temperature soars, you can depend upon your economical electric refrigerator to provide constant, food-saving cold. And although it may be using a little more electricity now, the small added cost is far outweighed by the food savings it makes possible.

HOT WEATHER TIPS ON REFRIGERATOR CARE
1 Defrost whenever frost reaches ¼-inch thickness. Frost forms faster in hot weather.
2 Open door only when necessary and close it quickly.
3 Do not store hot foods. Let them cool first.
4 Cover all liquids. Moisture drawn to freezing unit speeds formation of frost.
5 Keep cold control at lowest setting necessary to assure safe temperatures.
6 Use fast freezing sparingly. Return to normal setting promptly.
7 Don't overcrowd shelves. It hinders air circulation.
8 Don't use refrigerator as a pantry. Store only perishables and foods requiring chilling.

For Your Consideration

The campaign for County Judge is drawing to a close, and only a few days remain for the people of Boone County to weigh the question of the choice of the two candidates.

During the past few weeks I have endeavored to see as many voters as I possibly could, but I know and realize that I have not seen all. To those that I have seen and talked with I have asked their support and stated my reasons for asking it, but to those I have missed I want to say, I would like for each and every voter to consider my record as Clerk of the Circuit Court and the character of service I have rendered while filling this office.

I have conducted my own campaign. I am not allied nor "hooked up" with any candidate for Governor or other state officer, and have made no deals with any financial institution in the County and if elected will give my whole time to the administration of the office.

I will strive to hold the administrative affairs of Boone County on the same high plane that they have been held for the past quarter of a century.

Your Support Will Be Appreciated

Kidneys Must Work Well-

For You To Feel Well

24 hours every day, 7 days every week, never stopping, the kidneys filter waste matter from the blood.

If more people were aware of how the kidneys must constantly remove surplus fluid, excess acids and other waste matter that cannot stay in the blood without injury to health, there would be better understanding of why the whole system is upset when kidneys fail to function properly.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination sometimes warns that something is wrong. You may suffer nagging backache, headaches, dizziness, rheumatic pains, getting up at nights, swelling.

Why not try Doan's Pills? You will be using a medicine recommended the country over. Doan's stimulate the function of the kidneys and help them to flush out poisonous waste from the blood. They contain nothing harmful. Get Doan's today. Use with confidence. At all drug stores.

DOAN'S PILLS

See Here, Private Hargrove!

by Marion Hargrove

W.N.U. SERVICE

IF FIRST SERGEANT CLARENCE A. GOLDSMITH, back in the old battery where I was supposed to have learned the art of cooking for the army, ever gets his hands on this, it will provide him with amusement throughout a long, hard winter.

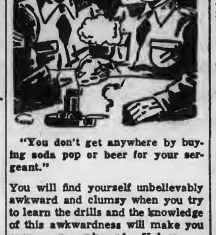
When he reads that Private Edward Thomas Marion Lawton Hargrove, ASN 34116620, is giving advice to prospective soldiers, his derisive bellow will disturb the training program in the next regiment.

"My God!" he will roar. "Look who's learning who how to do what! My God! The blind leading the blind!"

It was once said, Sergeant Goldsmith, by the eminent vegetarian George Bernard Shaw that he who can, does; he who can't, teaches.

This, dear sergeant, is my contribution to the army and to posterity. Please go away and leave us young people to our studies.

CHAPTER I



If I were giving advice to the boys who have already been called into the Army and will go away in a few days, I'd sum it all up in this: "Paint the town red for the rest of your civilian week. Pay no attention to the advice that is being poured into your defenseless ears for twenty-four hours a day. Form an idea of what Army life is going to be like. Leave your mind open."

Two weeks from now, you will be thoroughly disgusted with your new job. You will have been herded from place to place, you will have wandered in nakedness and bewilderment through miles of physical examination, you will look upon privacy and individuality as things you left behind you in a golden civilian society.

Probably you will have developed a murderous hatred for at least one sergeant and two corporals. You will writhe and fume under what you consider brutality and sadism, and you will wonder how an enlightened nation can permit such atrocity in its army. Take it easy, brother; take it easy.

Keep this one beam of radiant hope constantly before you: The first three weeks are the hardest.

For those first three—or possibly four—weeks, you will bear the greatest part of the painful process of adjusting yourself to an altogether new routine. In those first three weeks you will get almost the full required dose of confusion and misery. You will be afraid to leave your barracks lest the full wrath of the war department fall upon you.

"You don't get anywhere by buying soda pop or beer for your sergeant."

You will find yourself unbelievably awkward and clumsy when you try to learn the drills and the knowledge of this awkwardness will make you even more awkward. Unless you relax you can be very unhappy during those first three weeks.

When you are assigned to your basic training center you'll really get into it. You'll drill and drill, a little more each day, and when the sergeant tries to correct or advise you, you'll want to tear his throat out with your bare hands. You'll be sick of the sound of his voice before an hour has passed. The only comfort I can give you is the knowledge that the poor sergeant is having a helluva time too. He knows what you're thinking and he can't do anything about it.

You'll be inoculated against smallpox, typhoid, tetanus, yellow fever, pneumonia, and practically all the other ills that flesh is heir to. You'll be taught foot drill, the handling of a rifle, the use of the gas mask, the peculiarities of military vehicles, and the intricacies of military courtesy.

Most of what you are taught will impress you as utterly useless nonsense, but you'll learn it.

You'll be initiated into the mysteries of the kitchen police, probably before you've been in the Army for a week. Possibly two days later, you'll be sent on a ration detail to handle huge bundles of groceries. You'll haul coal and trash and ashes. You'll unpack rifles that are buried in heavy grease and you'll clean that grease off them. You'll stoke fires, you'll mop floors, and you'll put a high polish on the windows. You'll wonder if you've been yanked out of civil life for This.

All your persecution is deliberate, calculated, systematic. It is collegiate practice of hazing, applied to the grim and highly important task of transforming a civilian into a soldier, a boy into a man. It is the Hardening Process.

You won't get depressed; you won't feel sorry for yourself. You'll just get mad as hell. You'll be breathing fire before it's over.

Believe me or not, at the end of that minor ordeal, you'll be feeling good. You'll be full of spirit and energy and you will have found yourself.

You'll look at the new men coming in to go through the same hardening period, and you'll look at them with a fatherly and sympathetic eye. They will be "rookies" to you, a veteran of almost a month.

For practical advice, there is none better than the golden rule of the Army: "Keep your eyes open and your mouth shut."

At first, probably, you'll be inclined to tremble at the sight of every corporal who passes you on the street. You might even salute the first-class privates. Then, when the top sergeant neglects to beat you with a knout they rub GI (These two letters are the cornerstone of your future Army vocabulary. They stand for the words "Government Issue" and just about everything you get in the Army will be GI. Even the official advice. This story, on the other hand, is not GI.) salt into wounds, you might want to go to the other extreme. This way madness lies.

When corporals and sergeants are to be dealt with, always remember this: Make friendships first and leave the joking until later. When it's the top sergeant, it might be best to leave the joking permanently.

It can be very easy to start your military life on the wrong foot by giving your officers and noncommissioned officers the impression that you're a wise guy, a smart aleck. Soldiers, like senators, "don't like for a new guy to shoot his mouth off."

So much for the don'ts. On the "do" side, the most important thing for you to watch is your attitude. As a matter of straight and practical fact, the best thing that you can do is to reason that you are going into a new job. The job is temporary, but while you have it it's highly important.

As, when you go into a new job in civil life, you do your darnedest to impress your employer with your earnestness, your diligence, your interest in your work—go thou and do likewise in the Army. As in your civilian job, the impression is made in the first few weeks. You make that impression, starting from the very first day, by learning as quickly as you can, by applying yourself with energy to each task, no matter how small or how unpleasant it is. You don't get anywhere by buying soda pop or beer for your sergeant.

Brodie Griffith, managing editor of the Charlotte News, adjusted his ancient green eyeshade and began glancing through a sheaf of copy.

"Hargrove," he said, lighting a cigarette, "it beats the hell out of me what fate did mean for you. Dr. Garinger down at the high school said years ago that it didn't write a formal education in on your budget. Belmont Abbey found out that you weren't destined to be worth a hoot as a public relations man for a Benedictine college. The drugstore chain in Washington said you had neither the talent nor the temperament for soda-jerking. And you certainly fizzled as a theater usher. Maybe fate don't know you."

"May I have a cigarette?" I asked, reaching before he could protect them. "Day after day I work my fingers to the shoulder blades for neither thanks nor living wage. I am the feature editor of a progressive, growing newspaper. What makes it that? My heart's blood makes it that!"

"I would fire you tomorrow," he sighed, "if anyone else could possibly straighten out the chaos you have brought to this office. In the most underpaid brotherhood in the world, you are the most overpaid, two-headed brother."

"I am the most underpaid six-armed Siva," I snorted. "Look at me! I am the feature editor, the obituary editor, the woman's page editor, the hospital editor, the rewrite man, the assistant to the city editor, the commissar for paste and copy paper and coke, the custodian of oral memoranda, the public's whipping boy, the trampkor and copyist of open-forum letters, the castigator of the composing room staff, the guest artist for ailing columnists, the tourist guide for visiting school children, the press representative at barbecue suppers of the United Brotherhood of Plumbers and Steamfitters, the butt of the office jokes."

"Period," said Mr. Griffith, "New paragraph."

"I lead a terrible, turbulent life," I wailed. "I am the man forgotten by Destiny."

"If you will get your elbows off my desk," he said, "the boy can put the mail on it.

"What you need," he continued, sorting through a batch of letters, "is a tour of military service. The Army would make a man of you. I was in the Army in the last war. A top sergeant at eighteen. The Army did wonders for me."

"That's not much of a sales argument," I told him.

"Then again," he said, "if we must take up my whole busy day weeping over your sorrows, let's not burden the Army when it has a belluva job already. Concerning the whole matter, I would suggest that you apply yourself to making up the woman's page right now, lest you come down tomorrow morning and find someone else sitting in your chair. Leave my sight."

"There's not a letter there from New York," I asked, "with my

"Well, my lad," he said with faint glee, "we know what Fate means for you. You can be happy now."

name written on it in a delightfully illegible, feminine, and slightly red-headed hand?"

"Is there ever?" he snorted. "Let's see—" and he went through the stack.

"Well, my lad," he said with faint glee, "at last we're getting somewhere. We know what Fate means for you. You can be happy now."

He handed me a long, white, innocent-looking envelope, addressed to me. The return address read, "Selective Service System—Mecklenburg County Board Number Three."

The President of the United States to Marion Hargrove, greeting!

The boy across the table in the Piedmont Grill lifted both hands and clapped his brow three times. He looked at the clock, then back at his breakfast, then back at the clock.

"My name is Hargrove," I said, handing him a cigarette.

"Mine is Piel," he said. "Melvin Piel. Tomorrow maybe you can make it 'Private' on the front."

"So long as you're healthy," I said, shrugging a shoulder. "It cuts down on the income tax."

"My hay fever," he wailed. "What will I do with my hay fever? In the jungles of South Carolina for maneuvers, with my hay fever! Oy!"

"Just look at it," he said on the way to the bus station, "maybe a posthumous medal my grandchildren will get. Private Melvin Piel, who gave his life valiantly and through the nose from hay fever yet. Sneezing to glory."

The bus station on that morning in July was a pathetic picture. Four large groups of boys, reconciled to the grim and gruesome life ahead of them, were bade farewell by wailing mothers and nobly suffering girl friends who had come down to see their loved ones off in a blaze of pathos. It was pretty terrible.

The buses swung out of the terminal, through midtown, and out toward the road to Fayetteville. The boys began to feel better, shouted farewells to startled girls on the street and finally broke into raucous song. Four flowers of the nation started a blackjack game on a suitcase in the back of the bus.

Brother Piel's spirits brightened a little. His smooth voice found its way through the hay fever and emerged in song. "It's a lovely day tomorrow," he sang. "Tomorrow is a lovely day.

"Look at me tomorrow," he said, breaking off suddenly. "Hay fook, Private Piel. Straw foot, Private Piel. Hay and straw and look at what I've got. Hay fever yet! Oy, what a life I'll lead!"

"Maybe what I'd better do when I get there, I'd better tell them I'd like to go north. They could use a good man in Alaska."

"The South Pole is your meat," I told him.

"That's it! The South Pole! Boy, I'm going to love the Army!"

The tumult and the shouting died about halfway to Fayetteville. The boys became quiet and thoughtful.

Lesson for August 8

GOD SHOWS HIS PEOPLE THE WAY

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 13:17-22; 15: 17-22a.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord is my strength and song, and he is become my salvation.—Exodus 15:2.

The destinies of the nations are in the hands of God. Warriors are mighty in battle, counselors are quick to declare their wisdom, and diplomats are clever in the manipulation of wealth and people. But when they have all exercised to the limit their ingenuity and power they have only succeeded in bringing us "blood, sweat and tears" as the portion of all mankind.

Israel was about to be delivered from the bondage of Egypt, and God through His leader Moses was ready to be their guide. Even so He guides every believer in Christ. We may learn three things from this lesson.

I. God Has a Plan (Exod. 13: 17-19).

There was a direct, easy road along the coast of the Mediterranean up to Canaan, but God with His pillar of cloud and fire did not lead out in that way.

How strange that He should take them by a longer, more difficult way! Not at all. He knew the danger of the easy way. It was there that the warlike Philistines would be lying in ambush. Such immediate conflict would discourage Israel and tempt them to return to the fleshpots of Egypt. So He took them the other way.

Note that God's guidance for them was one of intelligent planning, not just impulse or chance. He knew what to do, and He did it, for their good.

God has a plan, not only for the nations, but also for individuals, for your life and mine. Let us find His will for us, for it is good, acceptable and perfect (Rom. 12:1, 2).

Note the honoring of the faith of Joseph in God's promise (v. 19). The memory of his assurance was a blessing to his descendants, and they honored it and him. What will our descendants have to say about our faith in God?

II. God Provides Guidance (Exod. 13:20-22).

God's plan is made known to His people as they follow Him step by step. This means that there must be guidance, moment by moment, if His plan is to be worked out. He gives such guidance and it is only when His children fail to follow it that the pattern of life becomes confused.

The field of divine guidance is one in which Christians have widely divergent experiences. Some know the sweet, unconfused daily experience of God's hand upon them, caring for even the minor details (or are they minor?) of life. Others have known the directive power of God in some life crisis, but not in the ordinary affairs of life. Many, and perhaps most, think of divine guidance as a spiritual theory of which the preacher talks, but know nothing of it in their own lives.

What makes this great difference? Faith—or the lack of it. Those who trust God accept and receive His blessed leadership moment by moment. It is as simple as that. Others reach out and take it when the pressure of life makes them cast themselves on God. Others simply muddle along "doing their best," which is not their best, for God is not in it.

The pillar of cloud, which became luminous at night, was ideal for the guidance of Israel. It provided shade by day from the hot sun, and a sure guide in the darkness of the night.

III. God Gives Joyous Victory (Exod. 15:17-22a).

The Israel soon came against the insurmountable barrier (humanly speaking) of the Red sea. Then Pharaoh, regretting that he had released them, came up after them—an impossible situation, and the people began to berate Moses. This time he stood fast in his faith and said: "Stand still and see the salvation of Jehovah"—and it came!

Then followed the song of victorious joy, which Moses wrote and the people sang. Deliverance brings joy, and forget it not, God is able to deliver those who put their trust in Him.

The application to our spiritual lives is a blessed one. Setting out on God's way does not mean that one will not have trials. They come, and quickly. We do not get farther than our Red sea when the world sees an opportunity to draw us back and comes charging at us from the rear, like Pharaoh. What to do? Trust God, and He will drown the Pharaoh who pursues you in the very Red sea which is now your difficulty. He will bring you through dryshod if you count on Him.

Fearful, fretting, fussing Christian, why not "stand still" and let God work out your salvation. You cannot bear the burdens of all the world. He can, and will set you free so that you too may go forward for Him.

When the soldier talks about "the skipper" he means his captain, the head of his company. And that's just what the title "captain" means. It comes from the Latin word "caput" meaning "head." Another leader high in the Army man's favor is Camel cigarettes—they're first choice with men in the Army. (Based on actual sales records from service men's own stores.) When you're sending gifts from home, keep in mind that a carton of cigarettes is always most welcome. And though there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. S., and to men in the Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard wherever they are.—Adv.

ON THE HOME FRONT with RUTH WYETH SPEARS

TODAY'S living room is often furnished with streamlined pieces that have served a more humble purpose. Almost any plain washstand or dresser may be given long smart lines by adding open shelves at the ends. Here a top of plywood with a plain moulding around the edges extends across the stand and shelves. By adding a plain baseboard and a coat of paint the piece is finished with a modern air. The paint should match the woodwork and if old hardware is removed to make way for simple new drawer pulls the screw holes should be filled with plastic wood and sandpapered before painting.

The diagram at the upper right shows how to make the wall decoration from a remnant of flowered chintz. If you use an old frame, the chintz picture may be given the appearance of an oil painting by applying several coats of varnish, allowing plenty of time for each coat to dry thoroughly.

Housewives Are Urged To Turn in Waste Fats

That there is an acute need for more fats and greases is emphasized in a recent statement by Donald M. Nelson, chairman of WPB.

Over 85 per cent of all glycerine produced is now used for military purposes and the need is increasing. Housewives have been most co-operative in response to appeals to save waste fats; but government surveys reveal that while six out of ten women are saving fats, only three out of ten have thus far been delivering their waste fat to meat dealer collectors.

Directions are very simple. Housewives simply strain waste fats of every kind into a clean can and, as soon as the can is full, take it without delay to a meat dealer or frozen food locker operator. Any clean can will do.

MESSAGE TO VOTER'S

54TH DISTRICT

Saturday, August 7th is Primary Election Day.

The right of suffrage is a privilege as well as a duty and obligation. Go to your respective voting places next Saturday and cast a Typical American Democrat Ballot for Kenneth E. (Jack) Johnson.

Each week I have had an article or message in the county papers in both Boone and Gallatin counties. This week there are several subjects I wish to write about.

I have two worthy opponents making the race for State Representative here in this district, both are fine young men. This is not a campaign between personalities but rather a campaign to determine who is the best candidate to represent us at Frankfort for the next two years.

Corporations and Utilities send their labbyists to Frankfort to take care of their interests when our Legislature is in session. These labbyists are required (by law) to register and it is then their privilege to present their claims, or to present their views before the various committees that are drafting bills in which these Utilities and corporations are interested.

Do we want to elect men to Public Office, from Executive positions they hold with Utilities or Corporations?

I have been in most of the precincts of Boone and Gallatin counties during this campaign and I have found a hearty welcome everywhere I have been. I'm qualified to handle the office of State Representative and it is my purpose to represent the people of this district diligently, alertly and impartially regardless race, color or creed.

As I pass thru Boone and Gallatin Counties during this campaign, I stop before our Roll of Honor Boards containing the names of our boys who are in the Armed Forces, a tear comes to the eye, and then my heart swells with pride, for I know they are distinguishing themselves with glory on the fighting fronts.

My prayers join with yours, Mothers and Fathers of these stalwart noble sons, and I pause and say, "God-speed, soldier boys, wherever you may be, happy landings, and may your return home be son."

I'm very much interested in seeing an Absentee Ballot Law passed by our Legislature, covering all elections so that any of our citizens, when away from home or outside the limits of the State, thru no fault of their own may still vote in any election that might be held while they are away.

The work and activities of our County Nurses with the clinics here in our two counties are certainly worthy of our heartiest commendations for the good they have accomplished in our homes and in the care of our children in our schools.

The "Homemakers Clubs" for the vital part they have taken in building up the morale of our civilian population (many of them are Mothers of sons and daughters who are away from home serving their country in time of need) and keeping the ties of home together.

Our "4-H and Utopia Clubs" boys and girls whose interest in agricultural pursuits, learning methods best suited for culture activities when they take their places in our public life.

Our Farm Agent Officers of our two counties who are working in close cooperation with our farmers in furnishing data and methods for rotation of crops, plantings best adapted to different kinds of soil, marketing, dairying, poultry raising, and live stock.

I am very much interseted in an increase of pay for our teachers; to my mind teaching as a profession, ranks next to our clergy. It is so very evident that our teachers are not receiving salaries commensurate with the duties they are asked to perform. Much has been said in regards to increasing teachers salaries, but so little has ever been done. Your candidate is rather curious about a lot of things pertaining to teachers salaries and he is going to the front and see what he can do about it.

Gasoline sold to farmers for non-highway use, should be sold with a rebate of State Gasoline Tax. Our bordering States have a rebate clause and we'll see if we can't amend our State Tax Law here in Kentucky.

You already know how I feel about college training for our teen age army. These youngsters are making great sacrifices, and they are mighty precious, courageous lads.

Construction and maintenance of our Rural highways can very easily be maintained and kept on a Parity with the road building [illegible] we have had for several years.

Post War construction will come into it's own at a later date. We have the money now in our State Highway Department to take care of any and all necessary new road building and maintenance of highways under State maintenance.

There are needed extensions on our R. E. A. lines, that need to be completed, and I have in mind now, two or three extensions that should be completed righ away; our Priority Boards can handle this and copper necessary for it is available.

My campaign in the papers of our two counties comes to an end with the editions that come out this week. I have written these articles frankly, and, as writing is an expression of thought, they have certainly come from the heart. I have traveled thru many States in the past two years and I find conditions every where paralled those we have here. You know how I stand on various issues and I want you to stand solidly with me and send me to Frankfort with an overwhelming majority.

I have fought a good fight; my case now rests with the Electorate of Boone and Gallatin counties. I will be very actively engaged the rest of this week finishing up my campaign. I shall feel honored to be elected to the Office of State Representative here in this new district, and to be the first man to represent the people in it.

I live at 30 Bedinger Ave., Walton, Ky. and you'll find a hearty welcome there if any one wishes to see me in my home. There is always room on Kenneth E. (Jack) Johnson's band wagon, so come on voters of this district and let me have a decisive victory next Saturday.

I still stand four square on the pledges I made in my announcement for this office and will be ever constant in those purposes.

And with farewells unspoken
He gently entered home.

From this world of pain and sorrow
To the land of peace and rest
God has taken you Dear Father
Where you have found Eternal rest.

Our lips cannot tell how we miss you
Our hearts cannot tell what to say
God alone knows how we miss you
In a home that is lonesome today.

The rolling stream of life rolls on
But still the vacant chair
Recalls the love, the voice, the smile
Of the one who once sat there.

Nothing can ever take away
The love a heart holds dear
Fond memories linger every day
Remembrance keeps you near.

Pointers On 4-H Club Exhibits By O. D. Perkinson, Asst. County Agent.

4-H Club exhibits must come from projects carried by 4-H Club members. Dairy animals exhibited should be well groomed and trained to lead and stand. Animals that are not well trained are apt to make a good showman look bad.

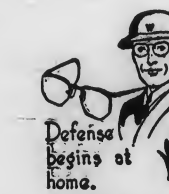
Poultry and swine should be in suitable crates that they will be comfortable and can be displayed to best advantage.

Vegetables should be neatly arranged on paper plates or in small containers so that too much space will not be taken up by each exhibit. It is well to know that size is not the only factor consireded in judging vegetables.

Tobacco exhibits should be cut at least seven days before the fair. Tobacco that is partly cured is easier to handle and judge.

Tobacco Should Be Primed

The priming or pulling of the lower ripe leaves of tobacco will add many dollars to the tobacco crop according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. By priming or pulling the lower leaves as they ripen will make big leaves out of what otherwise would be light weight flying leaves.



Many farmers priming tobacco last year estimated that they made more than $25 per day or from $50 to $100 per acre. The pulled leaves are tied in bunches of three on a tobacco stick and allowed to cure.

Those farmers desiring to do priming should secure a leaflet on this subject at the county agent's office in Burlington. The recent dry weather has ripened a large part of the lower leaves that will soon be wasted if they are not primed.

Smokes For Our Boys Overseas

Mr. E. Cowie, a representative for the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Winston-Salem, N. C. called on the business people of Walton recently in the interest of sending cigaretts to our boys in the armed forces overseas.

The War Department supervises the free distribution of the cigaretts to our boys in any of the branches of the Armed Forces designated.

The town showed a fine spirit of co-operation and responded liberal to give our boys cigaretts to smoke during spare time. This is one way of letting them know we are thinking of them.

The following business men donated $100 dollars toward buying cigaretts for the men in the Armed Forces:

D. L. Lusby, Walton Advertiser, B. F. Elliott, Guy St. Clair, Model Food Store, Roberts Grocery, Conrad Hardware, H. R. Dixton, D. V. Hill, R. Simpson, Dixie Chevrolet Sales, John L. Vest, A. H. Gaines, Dr. Maddox, Mary K. Stephens, Community Public Service, E. C. Roberts, Mann's Grocery, Aleen C. Conner, C. S. Valandham, J. A. Farris, Chambers and Grubbs, Thomas Griffin, Walton & Readnour and Walton Dry Goods Store.

The following letter was received from the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company:

Gentlemen:

We are pleased to advise that a shipment of 20 M CAMELS is being made through Special Service Officer, Port of Embarkation, in accordance with order you kindly placed with our representative.

Entirely aside from the pleasure men at the front will derive from smoking the CAMELS you are responsible for sending, there is another thing that is of major importance. This is the fact that the men who receive these cigarettes will get a real thrill out of knowing by this practical gift the folks back home are thinking of them.

We are happy to cooperate with you in this good cause and assure you we appreciate your selection of CAMELS. It is a matter of pride with us that CAMELS are the favorite with the men in the Service. Our facilities are at your command at any time.

Yours very truly,
R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.

Storage Space For Sweet Potatoes

Conversion of every possible farm building space for sweet potatoes was urged this week by Daniel K. Young, State Distribution Supervisor of the War Food Administration.

"It is likely that commercial prices will be considerably above the Government support price for the entire season if a large portion of the sweet potato crop is held back," Mr. Young said. "If almost the entire production is dumped on the market during the growing season, there is little chance of the market holding above the floor levels."

The WFA has guaranteed a price of $1:15 per bushel to growers from August through November for U. S. No. 1 potatoes, graded, inspected and loaded on cars in carload lots; $1.30 in December and January, and $1.45 during February, March, and April. The spring guarantee is higher, since the 63,000,000 bushel estimated production might swamp the market. Last year production was 65,000,000 bushels.

Proper storage will result in little loss, Mr. Young explained. Potatoes should be sorted and placed in containers in the field prior to storing. For proper curing, the temperature in a sweet potato house must be maintained at above 85 degrees with a relative humidity of 85 to 90 percent. Some ventilation is needed, but usually ventilators can be closed at night. Appearance of sprouts is an indication of complete curing, which ordinarily occurs in about ten days.

After curing, the temperature should be lowered over a period of several days to 50 to 55 degrees. Only enough ventilation is needed during storage to prevent an excessive rise in temperature or condensation of moisture.

Farmers who have not previously stored sweet potatoes were urged by Mr. Young to consult their county agricultural agents for details.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

FDR Favors Higher Taxes to Restrict Size of Public Debt, Defeat Inflation; Russia Continues Steam Roller Attack; Unconditional Surrender: Allied Terms

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of the newspaper.)

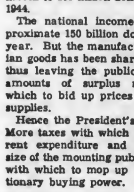
TAXES:
More in War Economy

Higher taxes—that, in short, is President Roosevelt's recipe for offsetting the tremendous federal wartime expenditure and at the same time heading off inflation.



Said the President: The government will spend 106 billion dollars during the next year. The public debt is expected to increase by 69 billion to 206 billion dollars by June, 1944.

The national income should approximate 150 billion dollars for the year. But the manufacture of civilian goods has been sharply reduced, thus leaving the public with large amounts of surplus money with which to bid up prices for smaller supplies.

Hence the President's conclusion: More taxes with which to meet current expenditure and restrict the size of the mounting public debt, and with which to mop up excess inflationary buying power.

6 Billion at Most

President Roosevelt's call for increased taxes was met by Sen. Walter F. George's prediction that the most that could be expected to be raised was 5 or 6 billion dollars.

Senator George

The influential chairman of the senate finance committee, Senator George, said of the 5 or 6 billion dollars, about 60 per cent will have to be obtained from individual taxpayers. The rest could be gotten by raising the corporate normal and surtax rate and broadening the federal tax on goods.

Declaring the U. S. stands to collect 35 billion dollars under present rates, George said any increases in individual rates would bear most with low or moderate fixed incomes.

RUSSIA:
At the City's Gates

Russia's steam-rolling attack on Orel continued to meet heavy resistance even as the Red columns bore into the suburbs of the big Nazi base. As the Russians' pressure increased, long lines of German troops were seen withdrawing westward toward the secondary Nazi hub of Bryansk.

Slugging matches raged all along the winding 1,200 mile front. The Reds attacked heavily south of Leningrad in an effort to widen the corridor leading to the besieged city; both sides fought to a standstill in the Donets basin, and the Russians stabbed stiffly at the Nazis' foothold along the Black sea at Novorossisk.

Principal action of the summer centered at Orel. Here, the Russians, with masses of infantry following up in the echo of thunderous artillery fire and chugging tank attacks, jabbed deeper and deeper into German defenses, until they stood at the gates of the city itself.

RIOTS:
Sweep Harlem

Allegedly interfering with the arrest of a Negro woman in the lobby of a New York hotel, a colored soldier was shot by a police officer. While the wounded man was being removed to a hospital, a crowd collected. Wild rumors began to circulate, a pop bottle was thrown, and the worst riot since 1935 in America's largest city was set off.

Fiorello LaGuardia

Negroes stormed through Harlem's business districts. Plate glass windows were smashed; stores were looted; crumpled merchandise littered the streets. Six thousand policemen aided by 1,500 wartime auxiliaries were called to restore order. In imposing a 10:30 p. m. curfew, Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia moaned: "Shame has come to our city."

Five Negroes were killed and 543 persons were injured. More than 500 arrests were made. Property damage was estimated at 5 million dollars.

MISCELLANY:

CHINA: Lin Sen, 81-year-old president of China, died after a long illness. Gen. Chiang Kai-shek has been named acting president.

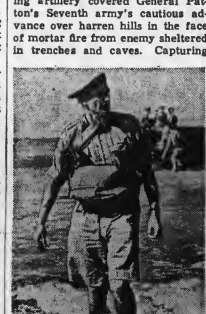
FOOD: Food output this year will be about 4 per cent higher than last year, according to department of agriculture estimates. About three-fourths of the supply has been set aside for civilians.

ITALY:
Allied Terms

When Benito Mussolini's government fell, one of the requisite conditions for an Allied treatment with Italy for peace was established. To Marshall Pietro Badoglio, Italy's first soldier, was given the charge of a new military regime.



The hectic days following Mussolini's fall saw a diplomatic stew. Axis sources declared that Badoglio's assumption of power was a perfectly natural evolution since what was more appropriate for a country faced with invasion than to concentrate all action in the hands of a military commander? Meanwhile diplomatic skirmishing indicated proposals from the Allies.

The Allies laid down these terms for peace: 1. Cessation of resistance; 2. An end of collaboration with Germany; 3. Withdrawal of Italian troops from Greece, Albania and Jugoslavia; 4. Surrender of war materials undamaged; 5. Establishment of an Anglo-American-Soviet military government of occupation; 6. Arrest of war criminals; and 7. Release of all Allied prisoners of war in Italy.

Decisive Action

Viewing the campaign in Sicily, military authorities might well credit the Americans of Gen. George S. Patton's command and the Canadians under Gen. Bernard Montgomery with decisive action in the final phase of the fighting.

With Montgomery's British forces stalled before strong Axis positions in the Catanian plains to the southeast of the defensive triangle, roaring artillery covered General Patton's Seventh army's cautious advance over harren hills in the face of mortar fire from enemy sheltered in trenches and caves. Capturing Maj.-Gen. G. G. Simonds, commanding the First Canadian division, wades ashore during operations in Sicily.

Troina, the Americans cut the supply road linking the Axis' right flank with their left and hending the whole enemy line in this sector toward the sea.

Farther to the south, Canadians broke through the Axis stronghold of Regalbuto, thus menacing the enemy's whole Catanian line from the rear. The advance also put the Canadians within sight of the supply road rimming towering Mt. Etna, along whose slopes the Axis have entrenched themselves.

SOUTHWEST PACIFIC:
Tanks in Jungles

Brought into the fight after aircraft had failed to reduce sufficiently strongholds the Japs had hewed in the jungle, 13-ton tanks led the Americans' drive on Munda in the Solomons.

Unable to detect the Japs' positions through the dense brush and foliage, aircraft were compelled to drop their bombs over a wide area, hoping that a heavy tonnage would land on some defenses. But whenever the infantry attempted to advance after the barrage, it met stiff enemy machine gun and mortar fire from the concealed pill-boxes.

Then the tanks were flung into the battle. Grinding their way through the thick growth, they drew the fire of the hidden enemy. Following the course of the gun-fire, the tank crews discovered the Japs' strong points and then blasted them at point blank range. By such tactics, they gradually overran stubborn centers of resistance as the drive approached the encircled Jap base.

WOOLENS:
Army Buys Less

The army quartermaster corps will purchase about 50 per cent less wool and worsted products for the remainder of the year, and will defer buying these goods until the first four months of next year, according to the War Production board.

This change in plans will immediately release about 10 million yards of material for civilian needs to be made into blankets, coats, mackinaws and winter clothing.

DRAFT:
Call Dads Oct. 1

Fathers 18 to 37 years of age who are not "key" men in agriculture and industry will be inducted into servica starting October 1. According to the War Manpower commission, they will be called in their draft order numbers, regardless of the number of their children.

Burton K. Wheeler

The WMC's announcement of the forthcoming draft of dads drew an immediate promise from Sen. Burton K. Wheeler that he would press for passage of his hill postponing the induction of fathers until January 1 when congress reconvenes September 14.

According to the WMC, fathers will ha called only when draft hoards run out of men in the other classifications. Some boards are expected to be faced with that predicament by October 1, others are not, thus delaying the induction of dads in their districts beyond the date. Approximately 875,000 childless married men are to be called by October 1.

780 Miles Per Hour!

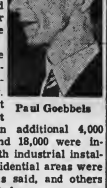
Last September, 36-year-old Lieut. Col. Cass S. Hough of Plymouth, Mich., took his P-38 Lockheed Lightning fighter plane 43,000 feet in the air.

Then Colonel Hough coolly nosed the plane into a power dive, and down it roared, cutting through the wind before it, at 780 miles per hour before being leveled off at 18,000 feet.

But last February, Colonel Hough decided to crowd two thrills into a lifetime. This time, he took a P-47 Thunderbolt 39,000 feet up and again plunged it into a whining power-dive, straightening out once more at 18,000 feet.

Technical director of the 8th American fighter command, Colonel Hough undertook the two flights to obtain scientific information for assisting fighter pilots. For his services the European commander of fighter planes decorated him with the Distinguished Flying Cross. In private life vice president of the Daisy Air Rifle Manufacturing company, Colonel Hough is married and has two children.

PRODUCTION:
7,000 Planes a Month



Thirty-four years ago, congress appropriated $25,000 for the army to purchase its first airplane—a Wright brothers 1909 model CI craft, with a wing span of 48 feet 6½ inches and a four-cylinder, 28-horsepower motor. Capable of flying 32 miles per hour, the plane could stay in the air 2 hours and 19 minutes.

Today, American aircraft production averages 7,000 planes a month, with the army air forces receiving 4,500 of the total of sleek, high-powered craft. Since the attack on Pearl Harbor, 73,132 planes have been delivered to the army, and up to June 30, 1943, 40 billion dollars was allotted to the air forces.

Against America's record production, it was estimated that the Axis puts out 4,000 planes monthly. Of this total, Germany makes 2,200, Japan 1,200 and Italy 600.

BERLIN:
Ordered Evacuated

With Germany's great industrial port of Hamburg laying in ruins, with 8,000 of its people killed and 250 of its factories demolished, Paul Joseph Goebbels ordered all residents of Berlin not engaged in essential war work to leave the city.

Paul Goebbels

The Nazis made no effort to minimize the destruction in Hamburg. Besides the vast number killed, it was reported an additional 4,000 were missing and 18,000 were injured. Along with industrial installations, large residential areas were wiped out, it was said, and others were badly mauled.

In ordering the evacuation of Berlin, Goebbels instructed residents with relations in other parts of Germany to make use of such accommodations, while those who could not were told to apply to the government for housing facilities. According to reports, the Nazis prepared for mass evacuation several months ago, laying up stores at central points throughout inner Germany.

SHIPS:
U. S. Transfers Vessels

Speaking before the house of commons, Prime Minister Winston Churchill revealed that the United States was turning over from 15 to 20 cargo vessels a month to the British merchant marine.

In making the announcement, Churchill quoted from a letter of President Roosevelt's, in which he said the transfers were being made in order to employ Britain's surplus of trained seamen.

ASSIGNMENT IN SICILY

Unsung U. S. heroes who contributed heavily to Mussolini's downfall were Italian-American boys smuggled into Sicily several weeks before U. S. troops landed.

How they got ashore must remain a military secret. But the fact that they got there is now recognized as a part of military operations, just as the advance landing of Lieut. Gen. Mark Clark in North Africa, carrying bags of U. S. gold.

These Italian - Americans were especially trained in the dangerous, delicate job of winning over military garrisons in advance of a landing force. In Sicily they had the advantage of speaking the language and being able to visit the homes of their relatives, few of whom loved Mussolini. From there they were able to work around to various military leaders.

It has long been known that Italian military leaders were of two types. One is the professional soldier like Field Marshal Badoglio, who was in the army before Mussolini's time and has no love for the Fascists. Also he has no love for the Nazis, and so was aot too difficult to win over to the Allied side.

Other type of Italian military leaders is the Fascist Blackshirt, who rose through favors from Il Duce, but who usually is susceptible to coin of the realm. Presumably U. S. advance scouts were supplied with what General Clark took with him in advance into North Africa.

At any rate, expert advance work by patriotic Italian-Americans, plus the popularity of the United States in Sicily, contributed to one of the most bloodless landing expeditions in history.

Also the psychological shock of the headlong U. S. rush through Sicily was what toppled Mussolini off his thorny throne.

GEN. GIRAUD'S WATERLOO

General Giraud was shown all the sights of Washington during his stay here, including the war department's massive Pentagon building, rated as the largest office building in the world.

After the French commander had been led through the labyrinth of Pentagon corridors to General Staff headquarters, and later out into the sunlight, he was asked what he thought of the place.

"Well," remarked General Giraud, "I've escaped from two German prisons, but I could never get out of this building."

UNDER TWO FLAGS

The chickens hatched when American ships were put under the Panamanian flag to avoid neutrality laws are now coming home to roost.

As a result, the U. S. government now employs 16,000 seamen whom it pays in hard cash every month, but over whom it has no disciplinary control whatsoever. The seamen are working under the Panamanian flag, though actually they are American citizens. So when they get into brawls in American ports, they must answer to the Panamanian consul, though they are American citizens and draw American pay.

Certain state department officials are urging that the problem be solved by transferring the ships back to U. S. registry.

Note: At present, when one of these ships clears a U. S. port it must pay a $20 fee to the consul of Panama, in spite of the fact that the ship belongs to the U.S.A.

AXIS DISTORTIONS

The Axis radio is trying to scare up a war in South America. The Bolivian army, with Peru's support, according to the Axis, is about to launch an attack on Chile to gain a port on the Pacific.

Here is the only grain of truth behind this propaganda: When Bolivian President Penaranda returned to La Paz from his visit to the United States, he stated publicly that Bolivian aspirations for a seaport had never been abandoned, that when the opportune time arose Bolivia would assert that claim.

Truth is, however, that Penaranda had no such militant motive in mind. Furthermore, moderate elements in Chile assert they would be perfectly willing to discuss the sale of the port of Arica to Bolivia.

If the Chilean moderates actually bring about negotiation for the sale of Arica, they will set a new high in good neighbor relations. It has not been long since the territorial ambitions of South American countries—as in the case of Peru vs. Ecuador and Bolivia vs. Paraguay—have been settled by a resort to arms.

Geography Is Factor in Determining War's End

Road to Tokyo Both Long and Rough; Pacific Remains Studded With Well-Fortified Japanese Strongholds.

By BAUKHAGE

News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

No victory over Japan before 1944?

When that sentiment was broadcast from Washington by Vice Admiral Horne under the aegis of Secretary Knox, a good many eyebrows were raised here in the capital. Of course, it is fully realized here that once the American people think the war is in the bag, they will be ready to resume the plowshare and the pen as simple citizens again, not as dollar-a-year men or munitions workers or victory gardeners or rationers or any of the other things we don't like. So Washington can't afford to be overoptimistic. But 1949 is a long, long way off.

When Admiral Halsey finally admitted that the capture of the important air base of Munda was "within reach," it looked like another easy victory scored and that Tokyo ought to tremble.

About Distances

But how much nearer are we to Tokyo? Get a map of Asia, including the Solomon Islands and if you can identify the little specks which are Guadalcanal where our main base lies, and Rabaul, our objective, note the distance between, and then see how much farther it is to Tokyo. It's as far as from New York to Casablanca.

And there is a lot of difference between the two roads. When we sent our troops over the Atlantic to Africa, it was pretty nearly our pond—there wasn't an Axis base en route. The Pacific is studded with Japanese bases.

There are two powerful Jap strongholds, much better protected than Munda right in the Solomon Islands, on Bougainville island and Rahaul, the huh of the Japs' empire in the Southwest. Beyond, over a long stretch of water, is the little island of Truk, said to be the main Jap naval base in the Pacific.

From New Britain, where Rabaul is located, it is 690 miles to Tokyo—further than from Tunisia to the northern tip of Norway.

In order to realize why we are still so far away from our objective in the Pacific war, we have to consider what it took to get as far as we have already gone. It took six months, some terrihly gruelling fighting, and many lives, to capture the little island of Guadalcanal. It took another five months before the Allies were ready to start their second offensive movement with the final capture of Rahaul as the objective. Progress at this rate and with this type of island-to-island advance is taken for granted by those who put 1949 as the date when Japan will be vanquished.

Defensive Action

It took MacArthur approximately as long to turn back the Japs on New Guinea, fighting to reach Port Moresby, and to capture their key point of Buna, so they could move on Salamaua and face driving the enemy out foot by foot from these pretty much isolated points.

The fighting, up until the drive beginning with the capture of Rendova on June 30, has been nothing more than offensive-defensive. Before that the effort, and a successful one, was to keep the Japs from attacking Australia from Port Moresby, from seizing the Solomons and making the Australian east coast vulnerable and to save the life line of men and supplies moving from America to Australia.

Only now, summer 1943, are we really taking offensive action in the Southwest Pacific and, as I said, if you look at a map of Asia which shows all of the territory held by the Japanese, you will see that what we have won since our offensive really began is a very thin sliver, geographically speaking. In enemy effectives destroyed, it has been larger in proportion, but the navy men in Washington who talk about 1949 speak with a conservative geographical accent.

Diary of a Broadcaster

Isn't it awfully dull in Washington with congress gone home and everything closed up?

If you think so, you are dreaming a midsummer night's dream.

When I arise and start down toward Pennsylvania avenue, I note the little spring cat which has joined its maltese mother and its tiger (perhaps) father. Is it going limp with boredom? It is not. It prepares its toilat with the same tongue-wearying energy that it did when congress was in session.

That is just an example. Tha buses are just as crowded. Telephone numbers as hard to get. Laundry lingers as long among the launderers. Pants pant for pressing.

Recently I tried four leading hotels before I could reserva places for lunch. One of them was not air cooled. "I am ordinarily a two-suit guy," said a newspaper man to me the other day when Donald Nelson was complaining about the heavy buying of clothes, "but if I didn't have four suits now. I'd go to work unpressed and uncleaned or in a barrel."

'The Little Prince'

You recall I reviewed "The Little Prince" by Antoine de Saint-Exupery in this column some time ago. I have had many letters concerning the author whom I said was at the front.

Recently Leonard Lyons, New York columist, reported that the aviator-author, who is back on the fighting line again although he is 43 years old, wrote to his American translator:

"After seeing the fighting men and the mighty armaments, I realize that I must come to Africa to appreciate America."

He was spared, after the fall of France, "to fight again."

Let us hope he will be spared, when she rises, to write again.

Food Program

It was a cooler and more peaceful day than many which had preceded it in Washington. The President was in a genial mood when he met the press and radio representatives.

The administration, he said, is working on a new food program.

A few days before, I talked with a member of the administration who said to me: "Frankly, if we have a food program, I can't find it." And he was very anxious to locate it because a lot of his friends had been asking . . .

The President, at the conference I referred to, explained that he'd be tickled to death if anyone would explain to him how he could reduce prices in accordance with the stabilization under the present limitations set by congress.

A little hit later, I heard it said flatly: "We've got to increase prices if we expect the farmers to raise enough food to meet the present goals."

Now, Howard Tolley, chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, (whose business it is to figure out what is needed, not how we'll get it) says this:

Increased Consumption

"If the United States carries out its proposed international pledge to do all that is needed to provide better diets for its own people, the consumption of dairy products here would have to be increased 40 per cent."

That is just one product—representing, of course, milk, butter, cheese.

In order to bring the national diet up to the standard set, truck crops would also have to be increased about 80 per cent, eggs more than 20 per cent, fruit about 20 per cent, according to Mr. Tolley, and to raise crops for such a market would take about 40 million additional acres of cropland or about one-eighth more than is now cultivated.

With the present full employment, Tolley says that this extra output of the farmer's product could be absorbed. And this leaves out what would be sold abroad.

Right now, industry is working on plans to maintain this "full employment" by converting war plants to peace plants. Industry is trying to compete with the government in post-war planning in this field.

How many farmers are interested enough to get up and say "their say" in favor of a plan that will keep enough people at work so that they can buy this extra 40 million acres' worth of food they need to be healthy?

Speaking of Sports

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

THERE are certain golf shots that will always live in memory —both of the men who hit them and the spectators who saw them. They are the shots which, more than anything else, helped decide the outcome of many a great tournament.

James S. Kearns, well-known Chicago sports writer, recently recounted a few of those shots—to which he was an eyewitness. Kearns speaking:

"There was Harry Cooper, on the 14th tee at Beltusrol in 1936, on his way to what seemed a certain victory in the National Open as a proper reward for 10 long, stout-hearted years of trying.

"Coop had the biggest gallery on the course that day, and not a personal marshal. He had broken the all-time 54-hole record, and yet the United States Golf association sent him into the final round with nobody to protect him from the crowd . . . Nobody but Estelle Armour, Tom's wife, and Nellie Cruickshank, Bobby's wife, who knew enough of golf to try to give a player the fair chance he deserved.

Heartbreaker

"Well, Cooper stood on the 14th tee with the mob milling around him, and the National Open championship just at his fingertips. He swung away and asked for order. He swung back again . . . And again the front row of spectators was jammed forward, so close he couldn't swing down at the ball. Finally, on the third try, he hit the ball—into the bunker beside the par 3 green, and right there was opened the door through which Tony Manero slid to take the title.

"There was a Monday morning in Philadelphia in 1939, when it was steaming hot, and when players and watchers alike were dead weary from a week of heat and five days of golf. Byron Nelson and Craig Wood, who had come through a playoff with Denny Shute on Sunday with scores of 68 in a desperate battle for the National Open title, were engaged in a second playoff.

Byron Nelson

"Off the fourth tee, Wood had belted the better drive, maybe 20 yards. Nelson squared off to his second shot on that long and difficult par 4. He must have been 220 yards from the flag when he drew a bead. He fired the shot the way a Gerand rifle might be fired . . . Dead on line, low and whistling as it went. The ball struck, bounced twice, rolled, fell into the hole. There the 1939 Open championship was settled.

Masters Crown

"There was Nelson at Augusta, playing off with Ben Hogan for the 1942 Masters crown. Three strokes behind at the short sixth, he holed a great deuce to start catching up. Then at par 5 eighth, uphill, he saw Hogan hook his second. The door was open. Byron took a spoon on the uphill lie. He walked to see where the hole was out on the green. He walked back and took aim. Then he knocked the ball five feet from the hole . . . A low, drawing shot over the brow of the hill, pulling in through the guarded opening to the green. The shot meant an eagle 3, and a lead that was never lost.

"All these . . . But out of memory one mere shines bright across seven years.

"It was the September day when John Fischer of Cincinnati stood on the 36th green in the final match for the amateur championship of the United States in 1938. One down to Jock McLean of Scotland, he was on Garden City's hurricane-swept acres . . . One down, and with the muscles of his left leg torn so he could scarcely stand up to a shot because of a fall in a bunker the previous day. One down . . . And his ball 12 feet from the pin on the par 3 last hole . . . 12 feet of treacherous, sliding, sloping green. It was hole it—or be runner-up.

"Johnny Fischer sized it up, took a long and careful aim, took a stance. He swung the putter back, and upon the clubhouse roof, eight motion-picture cameras began to grind. Johnny jumped, dropped his putter.

"He smiled in half-apology, half-request and the cameras stopped. He picked up his putter, never bothered to sight the putt, and knocked the ball right in the middle of the hole for a 3 that made him even and let him win on No. 37."

Ripe Cherries Make Sweet Jams
(See Recipe Below)

Jelly Season's Here!

Think of the good cheer in a sparkling, quivery dish of jelly to go with your golden brown biscuits or rolls in the cold of winter. Do you need more than that to start you on a spree of jelly-making? My guess is no.

There's a great interest in jelly-making in spite of sugar rationing, for many is the smart homemaker who realizes what a spark and zest those little bits of bright-colored jelly can lend to wartime meals. So, go out into the berry patch, and let's get started on a batch of jelly.

Cherries, plums and blackberries are coming into season and make splendid jellies. They're all easy to handle and make nice, rich, luscious jellies:

Ripe Sweet Cherry Jam.
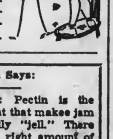
(Makes 7 6-ounce glasses)
3½ cups prepared fruit
4 cups sugar
1 box powdered fruit pectin

To prepare fruit, pit about 2½ pounds fully ripe cherries. Crush thoroughly or grind. If a stronger cherry flavor is desired, add a few crushed cherry pits to fruit during cooking.



Measure sugar into dry dish and set aside until needed. Measure fruit into a 8- or 6-quart kettle, filling up last cup with water if necessary.

Place over a hot test fire. Add powdered fruit pectin. Mix well and continue stirring until mixture comes to a hard boil. Pour in sugar at once, stirring constantly. Continue stirring, bringing to a full, rolling boil and boil hard 1 minute. Remove from fire. Skim. Pour at once into sterilized jelly glasses and paraffin at once.

Ripe Plum Jelly.
(Makes 7 medium glasses)
3 cups juice
4 cups sugar
1 box powdered fruit pectin

To prepare fruit, crush about 3 pounds fully ripe plums. Do not peel or pit them. Add ¾ cup water, bring to a boil and simmer 10 minutes. Place fruit in jelly bag or cloth, and squeeze out juice. Add small amount of water to pulp in jelly cloth and squeeze again, if there is a slight shortage of juice.

Measure sugar into dry dish and set aside. Measure juice into saucepan. Place over hottest fire. Add powdered fruit pectin, mix well and continue stirring until mixture comes to a hard boil. Pour in sugar at once, stirring constantly.

Blackberry and Sour Cherry Jam.
(Makes 8 medium glasses)
3½ cups prepared fruit
4½ cups sugar
1 box powdered fruit pectin

To prepare fruit, crush thoroughly about 1 quart fully ripe blackberries. Pit 1 pound fully ripe cherries. Crush thoroughly or grind. Combine fruits. Measure fruit into a kettle, filling last fraction of cup with water if necessary.

Place over hottest fire. Add powdered fruit pectin, mix well and continue stirring until mixture comes to a hard boil. Pour sugar in at once, stirring constantly. Continue stirring, bring to a full rolling boil, and boil hard 1 minute.

Remove from fire, skim, pour quickly. Paraffin hot jam at once.

You'll enjoy pickles, too, for your winter meal pickups. I've found some perfectly delightful recipes for you which will not take too much sugar — just in case you want to use most of the sugar on jams and jellies. Remember that you must use a pure apple cider vinegar and good, firm, fresh cucumbers to get nice, crisp pickles:

Cucumber-Raisin Pickles.
4 cups sliced cucumbers
1 cup salt
1 cup white vinegar
1 cup sugar
6 tablespoons raisins
1 tablespoon celery seed
1 tablespoon mustard seed

Soak cucumbers overnight in salt solution made of 1 cup salt to 1 gallon water. Drain. Combine remaining ingredients and heat to boiling. Add cucumbers. Boil 10 minutes. Pour into sterilized jars and seal at once.

Ripe Cucumber Sweet Pickles.
8 large ripe cucumbers
½ pound stick cinnamon or oil of cinnamon
2 ounce cloves (or oil of cloves)
3½ pints vinegar
8 pounds sugar

Peel the cucumbers, quarter. Take out seeds and cut quarters into medium-sized pieces. Scald in salted water (2 tablespoons salt to 1 quart water). Drain and simmer in clear water until they are tender but firm. Drain well. Tie the spices in a bag and boil them with vinegar and sugar for 5 minutes. Pour this mixture over cucumbers, cover jar and set away. Next day pour off syrup and boil for 10 minutes, then pour over cucumbers again. Flavor is improved by repeating the process several times. With last heating, place pickles in clean, sterilized jars, cover with hot solution and seal at once.

Like fruit drinks for winter? You can make delicious nectare out of fruits easily and use them when fresh fruit juices are no longer available:

Peach Nectar.

Select sound, ripe fruit. Peel and crush. Combine 4 cups fruit with 3 cups water and heat slowly to simmering. Press through colander, then through fine sieve. To each pound of fruit pulp and juice, add ¾ pound of sugar. Bring to simmering temperature. Stir until sugar is well dissolved. Pour into clean, sterile jars. Put on cap. Process 30 minutes in a water bath at simmering temperature (190 degrees F).

If you have a canning problem, write to Miss Lynn Chambers, Western Newspaper Union, 210 South Desplaines Street, Chicago, Ill. Please enclose a self-addressed envelope for your reply.

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Lynn Says:

Jelly Forum: Pectin is the magic ingredient that makes jam "jam" and jelly "jell." There must be a just right amount of it. Pectin is a natural jellying substance found in fruits and berries, but when the fruit or berry is shy on it, a liquid or powdered form of pectin may be added.

Jams and jellies may be kept for various lengths of time, but for best practical purposes it is best not to try to keep them for over a year.

Melt paraffin for jelly in a small pot over boiling water. Paraffin should not be smoking hot because it might lend a disagreeable odor to the jelly or jam.

It's possible to put up fruit juice to be made into jelly later if you do not have enough sugar to do it during the summer. Prepare fruit according to directions given in the jelly recipes but do not add water to the recipe. Squeeze the juice in a jelly bag if it is for jelly. Fill hot sterile jars with juice and process in a boiling water bath for 20 minutes.

BEDTIME STORY

by THORNTON W. BURGESS

SAMMY JAY MAKES A CALL

SAMMY JAY hadn't had so much fun for a long time as he was having at the expense of Chatterer the Red Squirrel. No, sir, Sammy hadn't had so much fun for as long as he could remember. You see, he and Chatterer never had been very good friends and always had played sharp tricks on each other whenever they had the chance. Sammy had not forgotten how Chatterer had stolen the eggs of Drummer the Woodpecker in the spring and then laid the blame on him, so that all the birds of the Old Orchard had driven him out until they discovered who the real thief was. Sammy had not forgotten or forgiven that sharp, mean trick. And now he was getting even. Right down in his heart he didn't want any real harm to come to Chatterer, but he did love to see him frightened. But his greatest fun was in matching his wits against those of Chatterer, for, you know, both have very sharp wits, as scamps are very apt to have.

Now all the time he had been mumbling and finding fault with the corn Chatterer had brought from his storehouse in the hollow reil on the edge of the cornfield, Sammy only had been pretending. Yes, sir, he simply had been pretending. You see, he had thought of that storehouse before Chatterer had and had thought Chatterer very stupid not to have remembered it in the first place. Now that Chatterer had remembered it Sammy was glad, although he pretended not to be. Why was he glad? Well, you see, he knew that Chatterer was tickled greatly inside because he thought that he had proven himself smarter than Sammy, and all the time Sammy saw another chance to prove to Chatterer that he wasn't so smart as he thought himself.

When he left Chatterer he flew straight to the Green Forest and from there to the edge of the Green Meadows. His sharp eyes searched the Green Meadows until they saw his cousin, Blacky the Crow. Sammy flew straight over to where Blacky was sitting. For a few minutes they talked together, and then both looked over to a tall lone tree out in the middle of the Green Meadows, in the top of which sat a black form, very straight and very still. In fact, to eyes less sharp than those of Sammy Jay and Blacky the Crow, it would have looked very much like a part of the tree. It was Roughleg the Hawk watching for Danny Meadow Mouse.

"Will you do it?" asked Sammy. "I don't dare to myself because he might have a notion that a fat Jay like me would make him a good dinner."

"Of course I'll do it," replied Blacky. "Old Roughleg never bothers me, and it will be a great joke."

"All right," replied Sammy. "Be on hand where you can see what happens tomorrow morning." And with that, Sammy Jay flew back to the Green Forest where he could watch.

In a few minutes Blacky the Crow flew over near the tree in which sat Roughleg the Hawk. Presently Sammy heard Blacky's harsh voice.

"Caw, caw, caw," said Blacky.

Sammy smiled. It was a signal and he knew that Blacky had done as he had said he would. Then Sammy flew off to look for some new mischief with which to amuse himself for the rest of the day.

NICHOLSON

"My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth." What a comfort it is to know that He always is near. On the dark hours of grief and adversity when plunged into the valley of deep shadows and sustains.

Heartiest congratulations of a wide circle are extended to Mr. Joseph N. Williams on the recent observance of his birthday anniversary and unite in wishing him many, many more happy returns. He was tendered a most delightful celebration and was the happy recipient of numerous tokens of affection.

Mrs. Jasper N. Williams, Mrs. Harry Hoffman and Mrs. Harley Bird were recent pleasant callers. Their kind thoughtfulness in giving roses while their fragrance may be inhaled, gleams out brightly in our drab life.

Winsome little guests, daintily clad, gathered at the home of little Miss Nellie Fisk Friday afternoon, August 6th and tendered her a lovely little celebration in honor of her eight birthday anniversary. The glow of happiness lighted up their youthful faces as they merrily sang, "Happy Birthday to You." The little hostess was the happy recipient of numerous tokens of affection, and it was the united wish of the group that she might enjoy many, many returns. Games were enjoyed, and delightful refreshments were servide.

Participating in the festivities were: Jacqueline Morgan, Bessie Morgan, Allen Butler, Johnny Butler, Peggy Jo Popp, Phyllis Williams, Norma Armstrong, Glenn Riggs, Kirtley Weldon, Lureka Armstrong and Bonnie Wallace.

Farmers in Marshall county are growing soybeans for hay as well as for oil, since corn could not be planted at the proper time.

Do You Know That...
MILK left standing in sunlight for one hour loses 90% of its Vitamin C!
SNAP BEANS left standing in room temperature for one day lose 46% of their Vitamin C!
SPINACH left on a pantry shelf 24 hours loses 30 to 50% of its Vitamin C!
EGGS stored at room temperature for three days lose as much freshness as in two months under refrigeration!
The quicker you put foods into your refrigerator the longer they'll last and the more vitamins they'll retain!

By Storing Foods Promptly In Your Electric Refrigerator

Exposure to warmth, air and sunlight quickly destroys many of the vitamins so important to health. Vitamin C, which you need every day because it is not stored in the body, and Vitamins A, B_1 and G all suffer losses under improper conditions of temperature and humidity. But if foods are stored properly in your electric refrigerator, these fragile vitamins stay put very well. So make a habit of popping perishables quickly into your electric refrigerator. Let its safe, cold interior keep those vital vitamins from vanishing!

See Here, Private Hargrove!

by Marion Hargrove

W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: Edward Thomas Marion Lawton Hargrove, feature editor of the Charlotte (N. C.) News, has started his story of a private's life in the army by giving prospective doughboys some solid advice on what course to pursue the days and nights before induction. He advises them to "paint the town red." On getting into the army he tells them "to keep your mind open" as the "first three weeks are the hardest." Like a job in civil life, says Hargrove, it's the first impression that counts. He has received his own induction notice and with a number of other soon-to-be-soldiers has completed the first day at camp. He is stationed at Fort Bragg, N. Carolina.

CHAPTER II

A soldier stuck his head through the door of our new dormitory and gave a sharp whistle. "Nine o'clock!" he yelled. "Lights out and no more noise! Go to sleep!"

"It has been, withal, a very busy day," I said to Piel, who was burled with his hay fever in the next bunk.

"It sure withal has," he said. "What a day! What a place! What a life! With my eyes wide open I'm dreaming!"

"It's been a little hellish out today," I agreed, "although it could have been worse. We actually saw a corporal and he didn't cuss us. We have eaten Army food twice, and, except for the haphazard way the pineapple was thrown toward the peas, it wasn't horrifying."

"I am broken and bleeding," moaned Piel. "Classification tests, typing tests, medical examinations.

The old sergeant, his face beaming sweetly, purred, "You are now members of the Army of the United States. Now, damn it, shut up."

I think I walked eighteen miles through those medical examinations. It's a good thing this is July. I would have frozen in my treks with all that walking and exposure. Nothing I had on, except a thin little iodine number on my chest."

"Funny thing about the medical examination," a voice broke in from down the line. "Before you get it, you're afraid you'll pass. When you go through the examinations, you're afraid you won't."

"I noticed that," I said. "I don't have any special hankering for a soldier's life, but I thought when I was going through the hoops this morning that this would be a helluva time for them to back out."

"The little fellow who slept down at the end got sent back," said a loud whisper from across the room. "One of his legs was shorter than the other. He's a lucky dog."

"I'll bet he doesn't think so," said Piel. "At this stage of the game, I'm glad it was him instead of me."

A dark form showed itself in the doorway. "I told you guys to shaddap and go to sleep. Do it!"

A respectful silence filled the room for three minutes.

"Look at me," said Piel. "Won't the folks in Atlanta be proud when they get my letter! Me, Melvin Piel, I'm a perfect physical specimen."

Big Jim Hart, the football star whom I had known in high school, spoke up. "Don't go Hollywood about it, Piel. Just remember, Hargrove's a perfect specimen too. And just two weeks ago, when we were waiting out in front of the armory for the draft board examiners to get there, he had one foot in the grave."

"And the other foot?"

"That's the one he keeps in his mouth."

"Yessir," said Piel, "the Army makes men."

So we quietly went to sleep.

The morning we took the Oath. One of the boys was telling me later that when his brother was inducted in Alabama, there was a tough old sergeant who was having an awful time keeping the men quiet. "Gentlemen," he would beseech them, "Quiet, please!" They were quiet during the administration of the Oath, after which they burst forth again.

The old sergeant, his face beaming sweetly, purred: "You are now members of the Army of the United States. Now, damn it, SHUT UP."

This morning—our first morning in the Recruit Reception Center—began when we finished breakfast and started cleaning up our squadroom. A gray-haired, fatherly old private, who swore that he had been demoted from master sergeant four times, lined us up in front of the barracks and took us to the dispensary.

If the line in front of the mess hall dwindled as rapidly as the one at the dispensary, life would have loveliness to sell above its private consumption stock. First you're fifteen feet from the door, then (whiff) you're inside. Then you're standing between two orderlies and the show is on.

The one on my left scratched my arm and applied the smallpox virus. The only thing that kept me from keeling over was the hypodermic needle loaded with typhoid germs, which propped up my right arm.

From the dispensary we went to a huge warehouse of a building by the railroad tracks. The place looked like Goldenberg's Basement on a busy day. A score of fitters measured necks, waists, inseams, heads, and feet.

My shoe size, the clerk yelled down the line, was ten and a half.

"I beg your pardon," I prompted, "I wear a size nine."

"Forgive me," he said, a trifle weary, "the expression is 'I wore a size nine.' These shoes are to walk in, not to make you look like Cinderella. You say size nine; your foot says ten and a half."

We filed down a long counter, picking up our allotted khaki and denims, barrack bags and raincoats, mess kits and tent halves. Then we were led into a large room, where we laid aside the vestments of civil life and donned our new garments.

While I stood there, wondering what I was supposed to do next, an attendant caught me from the rear and strapped to my shoulders what felt like the Old Man of the Mountain after forty days.

"Straighten up, soldier," the attendant said, "and git off the floor. That's nothing but a full field pack, such as you will tote many miles before you leave this man's army. Now I want you to walk over to that ramp and over it. That's just to see if your shoes are comfortable."

"With these Oregon boots and this burden of misery," I told him firmly, "I couldn't even walk over to the thing. As for climbing over it, not even an alpenstock, a burro train, and two St. Bernard dogs complete with brandy could get me over it."

There was something in his quiet, steady answering glance that reassured me. I went over the ramp in short order. On the double, I think the Army calls it.

From there we went to the theater, where we were given intelligence tests, and to the classification office, where we were interviewed by patient and considerate corporals.

"And what did you do in civil life?" my corporal asked me.

"I was feature editor of the Charlotte News."

"And just what sort of work did you do, Private Hargrove? Just give me a brief idea."

Seven minutes later, I had finished answering that question.

"Let's just put down here, 'Editorial worker.'" He sighed compassionately. "And what did you do before all that?"

I told him. I brought in the publicity work, the soda-jerking, the theater ushering, and the printer's deviling.

"Private Hargrove," he said, "the army is just what you have needed to ease the burdens of your existence. Look no farther, Private Hargrove, you have found a home."

This was a lovely morning. We began at daybreak and devoted all the time until noon to enjoying the beauties of nature. We had a drill sergeant to point them out to us. We marched a full twenty miles without leaving the drill field. Lunch, needless to say, was delicious.

We fell into bed, after lunch, determined to spend the afternoon in dreamland. Two minutes later, that infernal whistle blew. Melvin Piel, guardhouse lawyer for Company A, explained it all on the way downstairs. We were going to be assigned to our permanent stations.

I fell in and a corporal led us off down the street. I could feel the California palm trees fanning my face. We stopped at Barracks 17 and the corporal led us inside.

"Do we go to California, corporal?" I asked.

"Naah," he said.

"Where do we go?" I asked him, a little disappointed.

"To the garbage rack," he said. "Double quick." He thumbed Johnny Lisk and me to the back of the barracks.

At the garbage rack we found three extremely fragrant garbage cans. Outside, we found more. Lisk and I, citizen-soldiers, stared at them. The overcheerful private to whom we were assigned told us, "When you finish cleaning those, I want to be able to see my face in them!"

"There's no accounting for tastes," Lisk whispered. Nevertheless, we cleaned them and polished them and left them spick and span.

"Now take 'em outside and paint 'em," said the private. "White. Git the black paint and paint 'HQCORRC' on both sides of all of them!"

"This is summer," I suggested. "Wouldn't something pastel look better?"

The sun was affecting the private. "I think you're right," he said. So we painted them cream and lettered them in brilliant orange.

All afternoon, in a blistering sun, we painted garbage cans. The other Charlotte boys waved to us as they passed on their way to the ball park. Happy voices floated to us from the post exchange.

The straw-boss private woke up, yawned and went away, telling us what would happen if we did likewise. He returned seon in a truck. He motioned peremptorily to us and we loaded the cans into the truck. Away we went to headquarters company—and painted more garbage cans. It was definitely suppertime by now.

"Now can we go home, Private Dooley, sir?" asked Lisk. I looked at Lisk every time the blindness left me, and I could see the boy was tired.

The private sighed wearily. "Git in the truck," he said. Away we went back to our street. We stopped in front of our barracks and Private Dooley dismounted. "The truck driver," he said, "would appreciate it if you boys would go and help him wash the truck."

We sat in the back of the truck and watched the mess hall fade away behind us. Two, three, four miles we left it behind us. We had to wait ten minutes before we could get the wash-pit. It took us fifteen minutes to wash the truck. By the time we got back to the mess hall, we were too tired to eat. But we ate.

It was through no fault of mine that I was a kitchen policeman on my sixth day. The whole barracks got the grind. And it was duty, not punishment.

It was all very simple, this KP business. All you have to do is to get up an hour earlier, serve the food, and keep the mess hall clean.

After we served breakfast, I found a very easy job in the dining hall, where life is much pinker than it is in the kitchen. A quartet was formed and we were singing "Home on the Range." A corporal passed by just as I hit a sour note. He put the broom into my left hand, the mop into my right . . .

There was a citizen-soldier from Kannapolis to help me clean the cooks' barracks. For a time it was awful. We tried to concentrate on the floor while a news broadcaster almost tore up the radio trying to decide whether we were to be in the Army ten years or twenty.

We finished the job in an extremely short time to impress the corporal. This, we found later, is a serious tactical blunder and a discredit to the ethics of goldbricking. The sooner you finish a job the sooner you start in on the next.

The corporal liked our work, unfortunately. Kannapolis was allowed to sort garbage and I was promoted to the pot-and-pan polishing section. I was Themos Kokenes's assistant. He washed and I dried. Later we formed a goldbricking entente, Piel both washed and made Conrad Wilson dry.

Pollyanna the glad girl would have found something silver-lined about the hot sink. So did I. "At least," I told Kokenes, "this will give my back a chance to recover from that mop."

When I said "mop," the mess sergeant handed me one. He wanted to be able to see his face in the kitchen floor. After lunch he wanted the back porch polished.

"When you finish cleaning those cans, I want to be able to see my face in them."

any rate. But KP is like a woman's work—never really done. Conrad Wilson marked one caldron and at the end of the day we found that we had washed it twenty-two times.

Jack Mulligan helped me up the last ten steps to the squadroom. I finally got to the side of my bunk. "Gentlemen," I said to the group which gathered around to scoop me off the floor, "I don't ever want to see another kitchen!"

The next morning we were classified and assigned to the Field Artillery Replacement Center. Gene Shumate and I were classified as cooks. I am a semi-skilled cook, they say, although the only egg I ever tried to fry was later used as a tire patch. The other cooks include postal clerks, tractor salesmen, railroad engineers, riveters, bricklayers, and one blacksmith.

But we'll learn. Already I've learned to make beds, sweep, mop, wash windows and sew a fine seam. When Congress lets me go home, will I make some woman a good wife!

FOOD FOR THE ELDERLY

Now that men and women live longer and there are so many more "old" people in the world than in previous years, many of these old men and women are not allowing the younger members of the household to give them friendly advice for their old age.

Dr. Barton

Until recently it has been accepted as the "proper" thing that the elderly should eat much less food than those who are middle aged. I have spoken before of one of Charles Dana Gibson's drawings showing an old man eating crackers and milk while his day dreams showed him as a boy eating turkey and all the "fixings." Under the picture were the words "Backward, turn backward, O Time in thy flight; make me a boy again just for tonight."

That the elderly should eat less food than when they were active and doing physical work is right, but elderly men and women today do not sit around all day; most of them get about doing light chores or walking some part of the day. As exercise stimulates all the body processes, heart, lungs, digestion, increases the appetite and prevents constipation, the elderly not only want more food but they need more food.

One of the arguments against elderly men and women eating hearty meals is that all their body processes are becoming weaker and so must not be forced to handle large quantities of food. Thus it has been believed that the stomach in the elderly is "drying" up, becoming smaller, does not empty as rapidly as when they were younger. It is interesting therefore to read of a recent experiment in the American Journal of Physiology.

Drs. Edward J. Van Liere and David W. Northrup, West Virginia university, investigated how aging affected the emptying time of the stomach. Twelve men, the youngest 58 and the oldest 84, were studied. Ten were without funds and resided in the county infirmary; one was a college professor and one was a janitor.

A definite amount of food was given each man and about two ounces of barium sulphate was added which enabled the investigators to watch the position of the meal by X-rays.

The average length of time for the test meal to leave the stomachs of the 12 men was one hour and 56 minutes. The emptying time of the stomach in 50 young adults previously studied averaged about two hours and two minutes.

This investigation shows that elderly men and women can safely eat more food if they feel like it.

Removal of Adenoids Restores Hearing

One of the common causes of loss of hearing is a partial closure of the opening of the eustachian tube carrying air from the throat to the middle ear. Enlarged tonsils and the formation of soft jellylike tissue (adenoids) is often the cause of closing the opening of the eustachian tube. By removing the enlarged tonsils and adenoids from about this opening, hearing is often restored.

However, where there is a persistent growth of this soft adenoid tissue about this opening and operation is not possible, the use of radium is giving excellent results. I have mentioned this method of treatment before. There is now further information at hand.

In Archives of Otolaryngology (ear, nose and throat), Drs. Ernest B. Emerson Jr., Andrew H. Dowdy and Clyde A. Heatley report that treatment by radium of deafness due to growth of adenoid tissue yields excellent results. They describe the simple instruments used to place the radium in the exact position necessary to shrink or remove this adenoid or lymphoid tissue.

Before applying the radium treatment all disease present such as infected tonsils or adenoids is removed. Then by means of a local anaesthetic the condition of the opening of the eustachian tube is learned. If there is a great amount of this lymphoid tissue about the eustachian tube or if the opening seems swollen, the patient is given the radium treatment—irradiation.

LESSON

GOD PROVIDES FOR HIS PEOPLE

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 16:11-18; 17: 3-6.

GOLDEN TEXT—Give us this day our daily bread.—Matthew 6:11.

Only God can provide the necessities of life. Rationing has taught us that lesson anew if we have been at all thoughtful about it. The plan is one of sharing. Sharing what? The food and other provisions which come to us from God's hand. Unless our crops are good there will be less to share. Only God can help us.

This was the lesson Israel learned in the wilderness. To reach the goal to which God was leading them they must pass through the wilderness. Not only were there many weary miles to travel, but there were privations to be borne. Life is like that.

Now they cried for food. Note how elemental are man's needs in the final analysis—bread and water. The very things we take almost for granted as we concern ourselves with life's weighty interests and profound problems become, if lacking, the only things that have any real meaning. And who is it that can provide them? No one but God Himself.

I. Bread from Heaven (Exod. 16: 11-18).

Israel's longing for meat was met by the miraculous coming of quantities of quail (v. 13). But that was not the food to sustain them day after day. For this they needed bread, and it came from heaven, every day until they entered the promised land (Josh. 5:12).

Observe four things about the manna.

First, it was a divine provision. There are responsibilities in life which we may bear—and must bear—but in the ultimate meeting of our real needs we must look to God.

Secondly, it was a daily provision. What forehanded folk many of us are, and no doubt rightly so, for God puts no premium on improvidence. But once again we must recognize, as did Israel in receiving the daily manna in the wilderness, that ours is indeed a moment by moment existence.

We plan and bravely for the next decade or the next generation, but as a matter of fact it can only come to pass "if the Lord will" (read James 5:13-17).

Next, it was a limited provision—enough for the day and no more, except for a double portion on the sixth day, and none at all on the Sabbath. These provisions were made clear to Israel, and yet there were those who attempted to lay up for the morrow, and some even went out to seek manna on the Sabbath day.

We marvel at their stubborn obtuseness, but are we not often just like them. Some there are who are always expecting that the laws of both God and man should be set aside for them, but they come to grief.

Finally, it called for diligence and action on their part. They had to be out early each day (except the Sabbath) to gather it. God's mercies are for those who are willing to obey Him. He gives to those who receive by active faith.

II. Water from the Rock (Exod. 17:3-6).

"And the people thirsted"—for the daily manna was not enough, they must have water. Needy, yes, constantly needy are God's children.

"Every life knows the bite of necessity . . . every soul cries out in pain because there is wanting some completing favor, some culminating and all-contenting benediction. Here it is bread; there it is water; but everywhere a famine . . . in many a case a famine of soul, a spiritual destitution, a consciousness of a void which time cannot satisfy or space content."

God always provides. There is a rock in the wilderness. But what pleasure does a murmuring people find in a rock when they famish for water? It is God's delightful custom to meet our needs in unexpected ways and by means which we do not understand. Even our physical necessities come from unthought of sources.

III. Christ, the Bread and Water of Life.

Our lesson does not give the New Testament application of Israel's experiences, but let us not miss that blessed spiritual truth.

In John 6:31-33, Christ is declared to be the true bread from heaven, of which the manna was but a type.

Paul speaks in I Corinthians 10: 1-4 of this incident in the history of Israel, saying that they "did all eat the same spiritual meat, and did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ" (see also John 4:14).

Hungry and thirsty soul, you who are still unsatisfied after tasting all that life apart from Christ has to offer, will you not, just now, take Him?

Pigeon Chutists

Carrier pigeons employed by U. S. armed forces are today being lowered from planes in crates, suspended by midget-sized parachutes. If pigeons were released at 25,000-foot altitude from a plane moving 400 miles per hour without this protection, wing feathers would be blown off by the blast of air from the propeller, and birds would freeze to death. After a carrier has descended several thousand feet in the crate, the door of the crate is automatically opened, releasing the bird to do its duty.

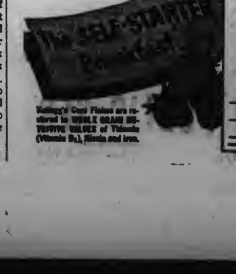
The gaily enameled unit insignia you see on a soldier's lapels and overseas cap are reproductions of his regimental shield displayed in the center of the eagle on his regimental flag. It's a part of U. S. Army tradition. Traditional, too, is the Army man's preference for Camel cigarettes. (Based on actual sales records from service men's own stores.) It's a gift from the folks back home, that always rates cheers. And though there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. S., and to men in the Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard wherever they are.—Adv.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

The basis of modern rubber usage is vulcanization, a word that is derived from Vulcan, the Greek God of Fire.

The cryptostegia vine yields about 17 drops of rubber latex a day, a seven-year-old Hevea tree three to six pounds of rubber a year. Properly treated Hevea trees, when 10 years old, can give from 1000 to 1500 pounds of rubber per acre per year. About seven pounds of rubber are used in making a small automobile tire.



Lay rubber articles flat when storing, allowing them to assume their natural position. Rubber loses its life when under a permanent strain.

Truckers hauling poultry must post within their trucks the name and address of the persons to whom it is being shipped, the place from which items were shipped, their quantities, types, grades and weight classes, and the number of head of each, the OPA has ruled.

Honorable Discharge Buttons

An honorable discharge from the army during the present war will be signified by a lapel button, the War Department has announced. Both men and women, whether officers or enlisted personnel, will be eligible to wear the button if they hold an honorable discharge.

More Butter For Civilians

Approximately 16 million lbs. of butter, in addition to the amount scheduled for August, will be available to civilians this month, the War Food Administration has announced. Previously, 40 percent of production was to be set aside for government purchase. This has been reduced to 30 percent.

X-Ray Clinic for Boone County To Be Held in September.

People who need particulary to be on guard against tuberculosis are Boys and Girls in their 'teens and young adults are the chief victims of tuberculosis. Although we think of youth as the time when the body is strongest, it is in youth too, that bodily energy is usually spent most freely. Young people who do not eat enough nourishing food, who work and play too long and too hard, and who rest too little may have bodies which can not deal successfully with the germs of tuberculosis.

All people regardless of age, who have been in contact with an active case of Tuberculosis, are in special need of a periodic X-ray Check-up.

If you think you should have an X-ray see your doctor.

Children are more apt to contact Tuberculosis than older people; therefore all children who have been exposed should have an examination and X-ray.

Farmers Urged To Buy Seed Early

Farmers are urged to buy their wheat, rye and small grain seed early according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. Considerable difficulty has already been encountered in securing Balbo rye and certain varieties of other grains.

Early sown small grains made with pasture and meadow seeding produces better feed with a big saving of grain, protein supplements and hay.

Experimental work with feeding hogs shows that one acre of good pasture furnishes enough foliage for two or three litters of pigs and replaces 15 to 18 bushels of corn and 500 pounds of protein supplement. Small grains, such as Balbo rye common rye, barley and winter oats seeded alone or in combination with vetch or crimson clover in August or early Sept. provides excellent pasture from mid October till late spring. The use of good winter pasture not only saves from 10 to 15% of the grain and 40 to 50% of the supplement but in addition produces faster gains and helps maintain better health and uniformity among the fall pig crop. Comparable results will be received with sheep and dairy cattle.

Getting the small grain crop seeded early in the county's greatest cover crop problem. Every farmer should do his best to solve ththis individual farm problem.

Follow Canning Directions And Avoid Accidents

Glass jars filled too full, screw bands turned too tight, and canning done in the oven are causes of most of the exploding or cracking of filled jars of fruits and vegetables, says Mrs. Pearl Haak, food specialist at the Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics. Home canners will avoid accidents if they follow closely the directions which come with the jars or covers.

"When food is placed in a jar with the new type glass-top cover, it is absolutely imperative that an inch of space be left for expansion," said the canning authority. "Then, to allow expanding steam to escape, the band should be turned back a fourth of a turn, after first being screwed tight. Jars explode when the steam cannot escape, the accumulated pressure shattering the jar." Mrs. Haak explained that any jar sealed with a detached rubber ring must have the metal band turned back a fourth turn after being tightened, whether processing is done in the hot water bath or pressure cooker. Screw bands used with the glass-top jars are made of steel which do not expand as did the old zinc covers.

Home canners are also cautioned against the use of ovens for canning. While heat control devices on kitchen stoves may make possible an excellent job of baking, they may not be exact enough for the high temperature required for canning.

When glass-top jars are used, the college recommends the precooking of non-alcd vegetables in an open kettle, then the fillins of hot jars to within an inch of the top. Processing for the required length of time may be done in either a hot water bath or pressure cooker. Detailed directions are given in the leaflet "Can Frults and Vegetables for Victory," available at offices of county and home agents, or at the college.

Special Events Contest to be Held at 4-H and Utopia Fair.

At the 4-H and Utopia Fair, which will be held August 21, the special events directed from the bandstand create much interest and attention. Mrs. Mary Scott Moore, Home Demonstration Agent, calls attention to new contests listed for boys and girls between the ages of eight and twenty to discover the best dressed young people at the fair.

A judging standard for these contests will include the following items: appropiateness for the occasion, suitability of the style or design to the person, the quality of the material and workmanship.

Publicity is being given to this judging standard in order to clear up questions which have been asked regarding these contests. The money value of the costumes worn will not be considered.

Carl Kiger, Covington Commissioner And Son, 6, Slain In Country Home; Girl, 16, Material Witness In Case

The daughter of the Vice Mayor of Covington is being held as a material witness as authorities sought to clear up the slaying of her father and brother and the wounding of her mother in a shooting early Tuesday morning at the family's summer home five miles south of Florence, Ky.

The dead were: Carl C. Kiger, 49 years old, City Commissioner and Vice Mayor, and his son, Jerry, 6. Mrs. Jenny Kiger, 49, is in St. Elizabeth Hospital, Covington, with a bullet wound in her hip.

The daughter, Jo Ann, 16, was being held at the residence of Elmer Kirkpatrick, Boone County jailer, in Burlington.

Officials, headed by Sheriff J. T. Williams and Sergeant Melvin Huff, of the State Highway Patrol Office in Williamstown, were trying to determine who fired 15 shots from three .38-caliber revolvers which belonged to Kiger, wounding Kiger five times, Jerry three times and Mrs. Kiger once.

The shooting occurred on the second floor, where the family was sleeping, the parents in one room, Jerry in another and Jo Ann in a third.

Two of the weapons were found in a cistern near the kitchen door of the house. The third was in the hand of Mrs. Kiger, to whom Jo Ann told officers she gave the weapon after firing at an intruder.

Tuesday's investigation consisted of questioning of Jo Ann and Mrs. Kiger, sending of the three revolvers to Chicago for ballistics tests and a check of the weapons by Covington police for fingerprints.

The girl told substantially the same story throughout the day. She signed a statement embodying this story. She was questioned first at the summer residence, a half mile south of Devon on the Dixie Highway, then at Burlington.

Mrs. Kiger was questioned at the home, then again Tuesday afternoon by Sheriff Williams and Sergeant Huff at the Hospital.

Jo Ann, Sheriff Williams said, declared that she was awakened by a noise and her mother's screams. Leaving the upstairs room in which she was sleeping alone, she ran downstairs, obtained two pistols belonging to her father and started back upstairs.

On the landing she saw the dark figure of an intruder, she said. Dropping one pistol because she could not pull the trigger, she used both hands to fire the other several times, she asserted.

Running upstairs, the girl handed the revolver she had fired to her mother, who lay wounded on the bed beside the bullet-riddled body of her husband. Her mother then told her to go to the near-by home of Robert Mavo, Jr. to summon aid.

One of the weapons recovered from the cistern contained four empty cartridges. The other contained no cartridges, but there were six empty ones in the cistern. The weapon held by Mrs. Kiger contained five empty cartridges, Sheriff Williams reported.

Authorities put aside robbery as a motive when they found $1,450 hidden under a divan in the library downstairs. Kiger's pocketbook, on a mantle downstairs, contained $65.

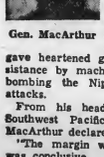
WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Southwest Pacific Campaigns Unfold With Decisive Victories Against Japs; Allied Chiefs Confer for Sixth Time; WPB: 'Essential Civilian Goods Only'

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)



Released by Western Newspaper Union.

From left to right, Maj. Gen. Geoffrey Keyes, Gen. Bernard L. Montgomery and Lieut. Gen. George S. Patton study a huge map of Sicily at the royal palace in Palermo, the island's No. 1 metropolis on the shore of the Tyrrhenian sea, which was captured by American doughboys.

SOUTHWEST PACIFIC:
'Victory Sure'

The Allies' Solomons and New Guinea campaign unfolded in a victorious pattern: Munda lay stormed. Allied troops beat their way through the thick jungle foliage toward Salamaua. The big guns of America's fleet battered at the enemy's faltering supply line. Ranging U. S. airmen gave heartened ground troops assistance by machine gunning and bombing the Nips in low level attacks.

Gen. MacArthur

From his headquarters in the Southwest Pacific, Gen. Douglas MacArthur declared:

"The margin was close, but it was conclusive.

"Although for many reasons our victories may have lacked in glamorous focus, they have been decisive in the final result in the Pacific.

"I make no predictions as to the time and detail, but Japan, on the Pacific fronts, has exhausted the fullest resources of the concentrated attack of which she was capable."

SICILY:
Few Left

After one month of fighting, three German divisions stood behind in Sicily for a suicidal rearguard action against the overwhelming air and ground superiority of the Allies. As the campaign neared its finale, the Rome radio announced that all Italian troops had been pulled out of the embattled island.

With the bulk of the Allies' 10 divisions bearing down through the sloping valley below Mt. Etna to encompass the last two important communication lines running north and south, and with fleets of bombers pulverizing important Axis concentration centers, the ring around the enemy was drawn tighter.

Hewn into the rugged country, German strongholds put up a bitter, last-ditch fight against the advancing Allies, machine-gunning and throwing mortar fire at Allied troops picking their way slowly up the open, craggy hills. Wherever they fell back, the Germans were dynamiting the hill or mountain sides to block off the roads.

DADS' DRAFT:
Congress May Act

Congressional action to settle the controversial question of the induction of fathers loomed with the announcement of Representative Andrew J. May that he would introduce a bill prohibiting the drafting of dads when the legislators reconvene September 14.

Importance of the development lay in the fact that May is chairman of the military affairs committee, on which the house relies for judgment in army matters. May said that with 10 million men already under arms and with 80,000 18-year-olds being inducted each month, the army is of sufficient size.

HOME FRONT:
Essential Goods Only

Limited supplies of carbon and alloy steel, copper and aluminum preclude the possibility of an increase in less essential civilian goods, the War Production board announced.

To keep production schedules geared to available supplies, WPB said, it was necessary to reduce requests of the military, civilian, lend-lease and other claimant agencies by 13 per cent for the third quarter. The services' demands for carbon steel were pared by 9 per cent, and all others' requests by 17 per cent. Because of manpower shortages, the situation in copper is particularly tight, it was reported.

At the present time, the government is conducting a survey to determine the inventory of civilian goods, and it is expected that any future requests for critical material for such goods would be considered on the basis of available supplies.

ALLIED CHIEFS:
Important Meet

With world events moving in a swift and momentous current, stoop-shouldered, twinkle-eyed Prime Minister Winston Churchill of Great Britain bridged the Atlantic to arrive on the North American continent for his sixth meeting with President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Winston Churchill

As the two leaders sat down at the same table for the most important of their conferences to date, Sicily lay beaten, Mussolini had given way to a military government in Italy, rumors were rife that the army was assuming direction in Germany, and Japan was making an effort to bring Russia and the Nazis together in Europe with a sacrifice of some of her own territory in Manchuria or Siberia.

The urgency of opening another front in Europe, of extending operations in the Pacific where General MacArthur's army was pushing the Japs from their island strongholds, were among the military questions under intense consideration.

RUSSIA:
Drive on Kharkov

With Orel and Belgorod at their backs, Russia's surging armies closed in on the once-great industrial metropolis of Kharkov. All along the southern front, German troops fell back before the long, powerful arms of Red pincers could firmly entrap and destroy them.

Once known as the "Pittsburgh" of Russia, Kharkov, like Stalingrad, lay in ruins, a gaunt ghost of the once-busy industrial center which turned out steel and armament for the Red armies. Occupied by the Germans early in the war, it was recaptured by Russia, only to be lost this spring.

After the capture of Orel, the Reds secured use of a rail line running south from Moscow through Belgorod to a point about 30 miles west of Kharkov. This gives them better communication in their rear.

SOMEBODY ELSE PAYS!
This is one time the woman doesn't pay and pay!

An unemployed 39-year-old Texan wrote the war department's office of dependency benefits, asking if he could apply for a family allowance on the basis of his wife's service as a WAC.

From the looks of things, the gent will have to get a job after all, for the army's answer left no room for doubt or argument: it was a very positive "NO!"

Beginning September 1, when the WACs officially become a part of the army, they may apply for family allowances for dependent children, mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters and other specified relatives—but not for husbands!

NORMANDIE:
Right Side Up

With high tide in, the great hull of the former French luxury liner, Normandie, heaved gently and came to rest at a 49 degree angle in the New York dock, where she had capsized 18 months ago after a disastrous fire.

Within the huge hull, 50,000 gallons of water still remained, half of the 100,000 gallons which had filled the hold when 95 pumps first began emptying the stricken vessel. To President Roosevelt, Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia of New York gave major credit for the salvage job, declaring that the President as an amateur seaman offered a suggestion for the most efficient concentration of the pumps for drawing the water.

At the time the Normandie, renamed the USS Lafayette, fell over on her side to come to rest at a 79 degree angle, the navy was completing work on her reconstruction as a troopship, with the cost estimated at $20,000,000. Salvage operations already have exceeded $3,000,000 and an additional $750,000 will be required for refitting the hull. When originally built, the Normandie cost $59,000,000.

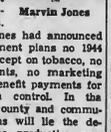
MEAT:
Sees More Supplies

Beef production will rise 20 per cent in the last half of 1943 and pork output will increase 10 per cent, Wesley Hardenbergh, president of the American Meat institute, estimated. As a whole, there should be a 17 per cent boost in meat supply.

During the fiscal year which began last July 1, meat consumption should total 14 billion, 700 million pounds, Hardenbergh said. Two out of every three pounds will be available to civilians.

During the first seven months of 1943, the department of agriculture announced that 35,324,248 hogs had been slaughtered against 30,812,661 in the same period last year; 5,827,659 cattle had been butchered against 6,805,660; and 11,379,504 sheep and lambs had been killed against 10,917,738.

AGRICULTURE:
Income Soars



Farm income for the first half of 1943 totaled $8,202,000,000 against $6,215,000,000 last year, the department of agriculture reported. Marketing of a large part of the record crops of last year contributed to the big upturn, the department said.

Cash receipts from crops during the first half of 1943 topped last year's receipts by 45 per cent, while income from livestock and livestock products showed a 31 per cent increase.

Of the total income in the first half, government payments accounted for $400,000,000. This compared with last year's payments of $431,000,000.

Farmers on Own

Declaring "This country is too broad, too far flung, too varied in its production to have the work done by directives in Washington," War Food Administrator Marvin Jones called upon the farmers and stockmen of America for a voluntary effort to reach the nation's food goals.

Marvin Jones

Previously, Jones had announced that the government plans no 1944 crop controls, except on tobacco, no acreage allotments, no marketing quotas and no benefit payments for compliance with control. In the hands of state, county and community organizations will lie the development of the production program, Jones said.

"While we may not have as great a choice of foods as we have been accustomed to heretofore," Jones said, "I have no doubt that the civilian population of this country will have a sufficient amount of good, wholesome food."

TAX REPORTS:

In an effort to simplify federal tax reports, the treasury has undertaken a special study of tax laws. Officials stated that reports may not be required of some classes of taxpayers, if the burden of paper work can be reduced without loss of revenue.

No matter what results from the investigation, however, there will be no immediate change in regulations, officials pointed out. Approximately 15 million income tax payers will have to file an estimate of 1943 income on September 15.

RUSSIAN OIL: Pay rates of Russian oil field and refinery workers have been raised to stimulate production, says a dispatch from Moscow. Basic wages will now be rated on nine levels, two new ones for specialists having been added. Commentators believe that the new oil industry scale is the first step toward greater recognition of experienced, valuable workers.

COFFEE PLASTIC: Thousands of articles, from radio cabinets to airplane wings, can be made of a new plastic derived from coffee, says Dr. Argeu Guimaraes, new consul from Brazil. The new substance, still in the experimental stage, is called "cafelite." The consul believes that a great new market will be opened for coffee, one of Brazil's principal crops.

'FATHER' BARUCH

Gaunt, gray Bernie Baruch, whose relentless prodding of the war effort has saved more lives than anyone can estimate, is worried over a lot of things besides tanks, airplanes and machine guns. Among other things he is worried over the human problem of readjusting the lives of people who have flooded the cities who have been thrown out of joint by the war.

Sitting on his park bench in Lafayette park, where he holds "office" conferences, Bernie sees the stream of girls, thousands of them from all over the U. S. A., dumped into government offices, into crowded boarding houses, and wonders what will happen to them when the war is over.

Baruch won't tell you—but his friends will—about how he handled this problem after the last war.

He had employed several thousand clerks and stenographers in his War Industries board, and after the Armistice he began to worry about whether these girls were going back to their homes or would remain in the exciting cities.

So he sent each girl a letter thanking her for the time and loyal work she had given her country. And as a hint that she should go back to her mother he suggested: "Anyone who will apply at my office can receive a railroad ticket back home."

Baruch also attached to each letter a $10 bill.

The railroad tickets were paid for out of his own pocket, since the government does not pay for personal transportation, and it cost Baruch many thousands of dollars. He was a little fearful that some of the girls might have taken the tickets, then turned them in to the railroad. However, he hoped that he might have helped to get at least a fair proportion out of the city and back home.

HCL

The high cost of living which the coal miners have complained about recently was substantiated by an OPA survey of company stores in western Pennsylvania.

John A. Fath, who made the survey, came back with a report of "exorbitant prices and mark-ups" and insisted that company stores, which do no advertising or sales promotion, should sell their goods at lower prices than other stores, rather than higher.

He found suits selling for $38.50 which cost the store $12.50. He found a shoe box marked $9.95, but inside the box he found the shoes themselves marked with crayon, "$6.50."

Result of the survey already has been a voluntary price roll-back in the company stores. Now that the government has taken over the mines, the OPA is moving to make this company store price roll-back not voluntary, but universal.

Note—Fath was once a storekeeper himself in Millville, N. J., hometown of Leon Henderson. He gave Henderson his first job.

HONORS FOR WORKMEN

The Office of War Information is arranging a de luxe program for next Labor day, hailing the contribution of American workmen in the drive for victory. "Producing for Attack" will be the theme of the program, and it will include inspirational broadcasts by President Roosevelt and other top-ranking war leaders.

However, this isn't the only labor show on the OWI schedule this year. Another special celebration for Labor, to be known as "On to Victory" day also will be observed within the next two months.

It was conceived by Maj. Paul Hines, chief of the labor branch of the Fourth Service command at Atlanta, Ga., and promoted by Hervey Allen, author of "Anthony Adverse."

All war plants will be asked to declare an "hour off" on "On to Victory" day, at which time special "War Merit" emblems will be awarded.

Climaxing the "On to Victory" programs will be a nation-wide broadcast in the evening—according to OWI plans—featuring such speakers as President Roosevelt, Winston Churchill, Generals MacArthur, Eisenhower and Doolittle and Admirals King and Halsey. Joseph Stalin and General Chiang Kai-shek of China also may be invited to take part. All the speakers will have a special message for American labor.

The evening broadcast will conclude with the sounding of taps from the steps of the nation's Capitol, in memory of our war dead, and an answering taps by U. S. buglers in Europe and the South Pacific.

Definite Foreign Policy Essential to America

The Issue: Shall Nation Adopt Policy of Participation in World Affairs or Shall We Aim at Nationalistic Goal?

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

Today America faces its first real problem as a world power.

Italy lies before us. General Eisenhower, as commander of the Allied forces of invasion, suddenly becomes a statesman. He is a soldier. He can win battles. Now, he is the man ultimately responsible for directing American world policy. What is American world policy?

Eisenhower is firm in his decisions, certain in his own procedure, because he is responsible only to his Commander-in-Chief.

But who is his Commander-in-Chief? Roosevelt. A man who may suddenly leave the scene in the midst of battle, if the American public so decrees.

And then? Has America any firm foreign policy, unfettered by partisan political restriction, a clear-marked path that a fighting man or any other man can follow?

In a few short weeks from now, a group of busy, hard-pressed men are going to sit down on Mackinac island and try to write what American foreign policy they think ought to be sponsored by the Republican party.

These men have to face the question of committing the Republican party to a definite foreign policy. And paradoxically, by committing their party to a definite foreign policy, they may free both political parties of all commitment on foreign policy. For if the Democrats frame similar resolutions, they can save America from a vicious split—one which, if it is not avoided, will crash party lines and can destroy the two-party system, the rock of our democracy.

The issue which America faces is simple: shall we, as a nation, underwrite a policy which will implement our participation in world affairs or shall we retire unto ourselves and pursue the nationalistic policy which says in effect: let the rest of the world stew in its own juice?

Until we took the Philippines, America was able to leave the great and vital problems which should have no political tinge, outside partisan politics. We have had other problems which have remained essentially non-partisan.

The Problems

Take labor. A vital question. But has labor ever voted solidly for one ticket or the other? No. The AFL will cast its traditional Republican votes in the coming election as it always has. Some of the CIO members will vote to support the administration. Others will vote as they darn please.

Slavery—really a labor question. That did nearly wreck the republic because it was made a partisan issue when it was not an issue at all! Many of the influential southerners were just as ready to free their slaves as the rabid abolitionists, heated with emotional fervor, failing to grasp the economic significance, were to force them to.

Again, unless a cold, calm discussion and understanding of the question of foreign policy takes place, we may face another split which, although it need not mean civil war, may mean a horrid dislocation of our whole political system.

When we went into World War II after Pearl Harbor, the word "isolationism" was forgotten. Today it has come back into our vocabularies and is being hatted about, like other political foothalls, by people who really don't understand its implications and are woefully ignorant of what dissension it may cause.

Politicians want to overlook it. They can't. This group of Republicans, headed by Deneen Watson, and a whole flying squadron of Democrats, too, are insistent that they be allowed to "let the people know." They are going to speak their pieces. And the only hope of lifting this discussion out of partisan politics is a "settlement out of court," an agreement by both parties on a single foreign policy.

Let's get back to that hot and perspiring day in Washington late last month when Deneen Watson and his colleagues from this self-appointed Republican organization, the Republican "foreign policy association," walked across quiet Lafayette park opposite the White House and presented themselves to Chairman Spangler of the Republican national committee.

Results of Session

It was some time before the results of this meeting between Watson and his colleagues and Chairman Spangler of the Republican national committee leaked out. Those with an anti-Republican slant, wove the words dropped into a threatened split in the Republican party, a drive to nominate Wendell Willkie for president.

To the person who tried to be objective, it was neither.

Mr. Spangler has one job—to keep the party together, to eschew any favoritism for any policy or any person. Naturally, these persistent persons who called upon him were presenting a problem. I believe it was that fact rather than what his critics said that indicated there was a leaning toward the "status quo" attitude, the desire to remain a purveyor of platitudes and follow the tide rather than to face it.

This issue—full participation in world affairs versus a return to nationalism or isolationism, if you will—is, according to our most earnest non-partisans, the most important issue which has faced the public and should not be a political football.

Briefly, what the men with their sleeves rolled up at Mackinac in September have to face is this: shall we, good Republicans, come out frankly for world-co-operation or dodge the issue?

What the Watson association demands is more than that and something the Republican national committee must face: will the party officially get behind a nation-wide campaign to "educate" the people on the international issue?

Unfortunately, personalities do get mixed up in these things and Wendell Willkie has become the symbol of the international view.

That is why it is essential, if the party is to take the issue out of partisan politics and disassociate it from any of the individuals aspiring for the Republican candidacy, that they must go on record.

The Monroe Doctrine

Walter Lippmann has written a book called "American Foreign Policy" and the point he makes is this: until 1900, politics did stop at the water's edge. We had a foreign policy (or thought we did) which was the Monroe Doctrine. According to Lippmann, we were living under a delusion. Namely, that we had under the Monroe Doctrine declared our whole policy—America for Americans (period) which implied, of course, that the rest of the world could do what it pleased so long as it kept off our grass.

We believed that we could enforce that policy ourselves. That was not correct. We were really depending on the British fleet to enforce it. It happened to be to British advantage to agree, so there was no trouble.

Then we mixed in world affairs, found we had to fight our own battles, and did it—took over Hawaii, the Philippines. But we didn't provide the means to hold them. And so, disagreeing on the various steps necessary to carry out our foreign policy, we failed to provide the means to do so—Britain was busy elsewhere, and one morning we lost the Philippines and came within an eyelash of losing Hawaii.

And so we now face the necessity of framing a new foreign policy which must include the willingness to provide security for our own shores and those other contiguous shores (South America and Canada) which might be used by an enemy against us. Or we have to take part in prophylactic measures—to stop the danger to our security in advance.

That issue once clarified by the two political parties will leave us free for a good, old-fashioned free-for-all political campaign, and if the best man wins, or the worst man wins, his policies can't affect the international welfare of the nation.

Failure of both parties to clearly set forth their views on foreign policy may well create a third party movement which could wreck the two-party system, the rock on which our Republic is founded.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Scientists have found that rubber is the only substance that can be stretched tremendously and resume approximately its original form. Too much stretching, such as in underinflated tires, causes "fatigue"—and deterioration.

The first manufacture of rubber footwear outside the United States took place in 1856 in Scotland.

If gasoline consumption is a gauge of tire wear, more miles are run in July and August than any other months. Of the gas used in 1941, 9.5% was consumed in August and 9.4% in July. February was the low month, with 6.4% of the year's total.

Meat-Hungry Thief Gorges on Bologna

He also stole $16.

Lucky Penny Goes To War 4th Time

It Started Military Career During Civil War.

METROPOLIS, ILL.—A talisman, now carried by Arnold R. Kugler in the marines, is going into battle as a good luck charm for the fourth time.

An 1855 United States penny, it started its military career with Rufus Cullom in the Civil war. It received its baptism of fire at Shiloh and went through the siege of Vicksburg and with Grant's army into Tennessee. When the war was over, Cullom returned to his home and put his "lucky penny" away for safekeeping along with other battle relics.

When American soldiers were called in the Spanish-American war 83 years later, Cullon gave his talisman to his nephew, W. P. Bunn. Young Bunn went through the Spanish-American war in the Caribbean area, seeing many of his comrades killed or injured or die of disease, yet he came through the war unscathed.

Nineteen years later, Bunn was watching Yankee soldiers embark for France to fight in World War I. Simon Korte, now a retail merchant in Metropolis, asked Bunn if he had anything that had been carried through the Spanish-American war. And the copper coin went off to war a third time.

Korte fought at the front in France and was with the army of occupation in Germany. When he returned to Metropolis he handed back to Bunn the coin that had kept him uninjured and safe through three years of service.

Bunn, now an overseer at Fort Massac State park near Metropolis, consented to give the good luck token to Arnold Kugler when he asked for it. Kugler was Illinois state assistant superintendent of parks before his enlistment in the marines.

Bunn says he doesn't think he is superstitious, but—

"You just watch," he admonished. "Kugler will get his share of Japs or Nazis and then he'll come home safe and sound, the 1855 penny in his pocket. I hope the coin doesn't have to charm some soldier through another war."

New Steam System Boosts Range of Fleet by Third

WASHINGTON. —The navy revealed one of America's secret weapons—our warships can go farther and hit harder because they consume up to 35 per cent less fuel than the ships of any other navy in the world.

Development of a revolutionary system of propelling American warships has given them "the edge over foreign vessels that many times means the difference between defeat and victory," the announcement said.

This was the first official disclosure of progress made on the fleet's introduction of high-pressure, high temperature steam equipment. Not only has the system been used on destroyers beginning about 1934 but it also has since been incorporated even in the nation's great new battleships, among them the North Carolina and Washington.

Naval authorities said that adoption of high-pressure, high-temperature steam methods marked a revolution in marine engineering which was made possible only by the application of American inventive genius and America industrial resources to the needs of naval construction.

One of the incidental results of the ultimate decision to use the new equipment was that it made American ships' construction dependent only on American resources.

Dog Obeys Boy's Sic 'Em To Rout Elephant Herd

NEWARK, N. J.—Spurred by a little boy's cry of "Sic 'em," a police dog caused a stampede of five circus elephants, giving their trainers and police no end of trouble and electrifying hundreds of pedestrians and some motorists.

Nine elephants belonging to the Gilbert Brothers circus were en route to entrain after finishing a week's engagement here. When the little boy urged his dog to go at the beasts the dog, obeying, sped into the street and began snapping at elephant legs.

Amherst, a nine-year-old 2½ ton Indian elephant, first to feel terror, led four African elephants in the escape from the herd. The elephants, despite being hampered by leg chains, traveled three quarters of a mile and took refuge.

Occupants of eight radio cars, two police emergency trucks, and several motorcycle officers and circus men rounded up the elephants.

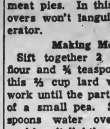
HOUSEHOLD MEMOS... by Lynn Chambers

You Can Stretch Meats and Have Delicious Meals

Leftovers need not recline on the refrigerator shelf when you can make them into delicious meat pies like this, simply and easily. Use leftovers from a roast with a few fresh vegetables and gravy to tuck inside the flaky piecrust.

Short on red points at the end of the week? There are several answers to the problem and I'm devoting the column to those suggestions today.

It's a good idea to be smart in your use of leftovers, and this is particularly true if you've spurged at the beginning of the week by purchasing a roast. After using the roast twice, you still have a bit of meat left on the bones, and if you fix it with an eye to camouflage, you can have a savory meal out of it.



Best way of extending meat when there's little enough of that is by using vegetables generously. Cut off what pieces of meat you can find on the bone, and combine these with some lovely, fresh-cooked vegetables such as carrots, peas, onions, potatoes and perhaps a few strips of green pepper for flavor. Combine all together with some of your favorite seasonings and tuck the whole mixture into these individual meat pies. In this way, your leftovers won't languish in the refrigerator.

Making Meat Pies.

Sift together 2 cups all-purpose flour and ¾ teaspoon salt. Cut into this ⅔ cup lard with spatula and work until the particles are the size of a small pea. Sprinkle 4 tablespoons water over the mixture, working it lightly with a fork until all the particles are moistened and in small lumps. Press dough into a ball, handling as little as possible. Flour board lightly. Divide pastry in half, roll lightly to an eighth-inch thickness. Using a 3¼-inch pie plate, cut circles from pastry.

Cut ½-inch wedge from circle to insure better fit into muffin tins. Press the pastry lightly to fit tins and lap over wedge. Fill with meat - vegetable mixture. Roll out remaining dough, cut in circles to fit over top of each muffin tin. Press edges of crust together. Bake in a hot oven (400 degrees) 35 minutes. Remove from tins and serve hot.

Here's a salad that's rich in proteins and can be used to pitch in for the main dish when points are on the slim side:

Green Lima and Bacon Salad.
(Serves 5 to 6)

2 cups cooked green lima beans
2 hard-cooked eggs
½ cup salted peanuts, chopped
2 teaspoons onion juice
4 strips crisp bacon
1 cup diced celery
¼ cup chopped pickle
½ teaspoon salt, if desired
Mayonnaise

Combine ingredients, add salt and mayonnaise. Serve on crisp lettuce with bits of bacon.

Have you discovered that cold sausage and meat loaves are low in point value and that they go further than the same quantity of fresh meat? And, if you really like a hot dish for a meal, that the cold meats are equally delicious when served hot? You'll like these suggestions:

Bologna Spaghetti.
(Serves 4)

½ pound bologna
½ cup onion, sliced
1 tablespoon bacon drippings
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon allspice
⅛ teaspoon cloves
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1½ cups tomato juice
2 cups cooked spaghetti

Dice 2 slices of bologna in skillet and brown with onion and bacon drippings. Add to this seasonings and tomato juice and simmer until thickened. Add cooked spaghetti and heat thoroughly. Serve with several slices of pan-fried bologna.

Broiled Liver Sausage and Tomatoes (Serves 4),

½ pound liver sausage, sliced
4 large tomatoes, cut in half
8 slices of onion

Cut liver sausage into slices about ¼ inch thick. Remove casing. Place the slices of liver sausage on the broiling pan with tomatoes that have been cut in half and brushed with butter, seasoned with salt and pepper. Broil for about 8 minutes. Liver sausage need not be turned. As soon as tomatoes have broiled for about 4 minutes, top them with onion slices, if desired.

Frankfurters With Potato Salad.
(Serves 4 to 6)

¼ cup bacon drippings
¼ cup vinegar
1 beaten egg
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon sugar
4 cups cubed, cooked potatoes
½ cup chopped green pepper
½ cup chopped onion
¾ pound frankfurters

Heat bacon drippings and add vinegar, egg, salt, pepper, sugar, potatoes, green pepper and onion. Stir until thick. Cover frankfurters with boiling water and allow to stand 7 to 8 minutes. Arrange frankfurters on top of potato salad for serving.

Here's a lovely, luscious dessert that will go with any of the above main dish suggestions. It's easy to make and very nutritious:

Here are the golden brown, rich, luscious pies being taken from the muffin tins all ready to serve. If you have a fresh fruit salad with the meat pie and a beverage, your whole meal's complete.

Apricot Whip.
(Serves 6 to 8)

1 No. 2½ can apricots
2 cups milk
2 eggs
¼ cup sugar
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla

Drain apricots. Mash with spoon. Chill. Scald milk. Beat eggs slightly, then add sugar and salt. Add milk slowly, mixing well. Cook in double boiler stirring constantly until mixture coats metal spoon. Take from fire, add vanilla and chill. When ready to serve, fold in chilled, mashed apricots.

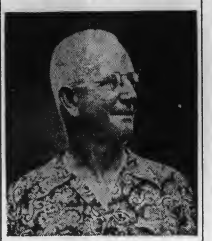
Speaking of Sports

by Bob McShane



Released by Western Newspaper Union.

THE Tam O'Shanter golf show of mid-July served as a reminder that the game, despite its moribund condition, is still being played in sections of the country.

Tournament golf has been almost forgotten. No major sport has been hit quite so hard—both from a standpoint of tournament play and membership participation.

The United States Golf association was one of the first sports organizations to chuck the whole thing right after Pearl Harbor. The governing powers decided to put their championships in moth balls for the duration.

No one knows whether the USGA could have made an important contribution to the game. But the organization could have made an attempt. The committee chairmen refused to do this.

GEORGE S. MAY

The Tam O'Shanter was privately promoted. George S. May, a Chicago business man, put up all the money for prizes—and it was no inconsiderable sum. Admissions were paid through the purchase of war stamps. The show cost George May a substantial chunk of money.

Long after the USGA had taken a powder, May did a big job in keeping tournament golf alive. The national organization lost prestige with professionals and amateurs alike when it cancelled its championships at a time when most major sports were doing their best to contribute whatever possible to the nation's morale.

The USGA will have a mammoth post-war reconstruction job on its hands.

The War and Racing

Col. Matt Winn took the farsighted view when he insisted that horse racing can do a whole lot more for the war program than it has to date.

Racing supplied approximately 3 million dollars in 1942. It is Colonel Winn's contention that the amount should be doubled in '43.

Racing is enjoying the biggest boom in history. Crowds, with pockets—and purses—bulging, are spending unprecedented amounts of money. The conservative element of the turf world is quite concerned about the matter. Quite a few individuals fear a reformer reaction. And their fears may be justified.

Before young Alfred Vanderbilt, former president of Belmont and Pimlico, was given the nod by Uncle Sam, he came up with a revolutionary suggestion. It was his suggestion that racing give everything above operating expenses and a small percentage, to some war fund. The plan, to put it mildly, was looked upon with utter dislike.

Colonel Winn has a suggestion that shouldn't be frowned upon by the most avaricious. The present racing policy calls for a war-day program at each track. On this particular day all the profits are channeled into the war kitty. Colonel Winn believes this should be doubled and that each track give two days' proceeds.

A large segment of the population continues to regard horse racing as a somewhat dubious enterprise, connected rather vaguely with pool halls, checkered vests and broken families. The industry should set an example without waiting for pressure from the outside. Other sports have done considerably more than racing in proportion to total receipts.

JUST KIDDING

Blackout, Maybe

Father—Helen, did that young man smoke in the parlor last night? I found burned matches there.

Helen—Oh no, father; he just lit one or two to see what time it was.

NICHOLSON

"Love thy neighbor as thyself." "The best evidence of our love is our loyalty." Our sincerity is proven by deeds not words. "A thousand words do not make as great an impression as one deed."

Hear the fine inspirational Gospel messages of Rev. John Huss, highly efficient pastor of Latonia Baptist church, broadcast on "The glorious Gospel Hour", each Sunday evening at 8:00 over WCPO. Through his effective messages so fearlessly presented, many sheaves have been garnered for the master's use, and their untiring efforts have been blest with phenominal growth in the mid week prayer meeting called "The Hour of Power", having the distinction of maintaining the largest in the Nation. While the radio is a most wonderful invention, and a priceless boon to "shut-ins", still we never recommend that any one "forsake the assembling themselves together" for radio listening.

Deeply appreciated was a tray of delicious dinner from Mrs. John Hume.

Mr. and Mrs. Vicent L. Stephenson and Mr. and Mrs. Grizzell were recently delightfully entertained by Indiana friends.

ALMOST overnight the familiar tank-truck became a vital part of the nation's war machine—essential to the very life of the nation.

Every railroad tank-car is needed to haul petroleum products to the eastern seaboard. Therefore, the oil industry's own transportation system—the tank-truck—has taken over the short trips which were formerly made by many railroad tank-cars.

When you see the Standard Oil Company tank-truck on the road today, you will know that it is running against time to get needed stocks of petroleum products to military camps and fields, to war industries, to other trucks engaged in the transportation of a thousand war necessities, to farmers for their tractors used in food production, and to countless other places where petroleum is indispensable.

'Round the clock faithful drivers operate these hard-pressed tank-trucks. Without the tank-truck war effort would lag—or stop! Every mission is urgent—many are vital.

KENTUCKY is a Fighting State

—AND GREYHOUND BUSES ARE PART OF ITS FIGHTING POWER

Kentucky is America in cross-section—fighting mad and fighting hard, doing its level best to back up our troops across the seas with the home-front co-operation they must have.

All of us in Kentucky are putting the drive that counts behind the particular jobs that are ours to do—whether it's sending our men to the colors—building their guns and ships and planes—buying bonds—or moving manpower.

Kentucky men and women, loyal Greyhound employees, are busy keeping our buses rolling to help keep our war effort in high gear. They're driving the buses—keeping them mechanically fit—conserving vital materials—giving wartime travel information—handling baggage.

As our share in this state's joint war program, Greyhound is taking our local boys to induction centers—and bringing them back home from training camps on well-earned leaves. We are transporting our Kentucky neighbors to their vital jobs in war plants and on farms. We are keeping essential travel on the move—linking up this state with every other area where the Nation's war activities are centered.

Kentucky is in this fight to win—we didn't start the fight but we're going to finish it!

A Vital Message To All Shoe Customers

LUHN & STEVIE SHOE STORE
34 PIKE STREET COVINGTON, KY.
BECAUSE there has been considerable misunderstanding regarding the quality of shoes now available to civilians, it is important that you become acquainted with the facts.
Perhaps this message from Covington's largest independent shoe store will be helpful to you.
At present, Our Government has first call on shoe materials. Millions of pairs of shoes are being manufactured annually for our armed forces. These shoes are built according to rigid government standards. Only the best materials and skilled workmanship are suitable. Neither you nor we would have it otherwise. Victory demands it.
But—does that mean good shoes—dependable shoes—are not to be had by civilians?
Not at all—You can still buy good shoes. (The honor and intergrity of our store stands behind that statement).
We, as well as other shoe stores could buy more shoes were we willing to disregard quality—But quality is the essence of this message—and this store is determined not to use present conditions as an excuse for lowering the moral standards of its products—standards maintained for more than 10 years.
Despite heavy demand from our armed forces, there is still a sufficient quanity of good, serviceable shoe material available to meet essential civilian requirements. We assure you that we will continue to sell you that return full value for your dollar—and satisfactory shoe mileage.

See Here, Private Hargrove!

by Marion Hargrove

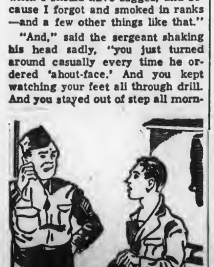
W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: Private Marion Hargrove, former feature editor of the Charlotte (N. C.) News has been inducted into the army and has completed the first few days of his training at camp. He has given prospective inductees advice to "paint the town red" before getting into the army and once in he tells them that "the first three weeks are the hardest." He has gone through the experience of the army physical exam, has been fitted with a uniform, been classified as a cook and has had a good taste of KP duty. In fact, he has had so much of the latter that his sergeant is beginning to despair. So to Private Hargrove. He has completed a KP session and returns to his quarters.

CHAPTER III

I tiptoed into the squadroom so that the sergeant wouldn't notice that I was wearing fatigue clothes. His voice rang out to me as I passed his door, and I slunk in guiltily.

The sergeant's face showed that he was hurt. "You were on KP again today, weren't you, Hargrove?"



I lowered my eyes and scuffed my toe against the floor. "Yes, sir."

"Oh, I get so discouraged sometimes," the sergeant said. "I try so hard to make something of you and what good does it do? Every time I go through the kitchen I see you in there scrubbing the sink! How many times have you been on KP this week?"

"Only three times, sir," I said, avoiding his eyes.

"It was all the corporal's fault, sir," I said, looking around to make sure that the corporal wasn't there to defend himself. "Just because I right-faced a few times when I was supposed to left-face, and I zigged when I should have zagged, and because I forgot and smoked in ranks—and a few other things like that."

"And," said the sergeant shaking his head sadly, "you just turned around casually every time he ordered 'about-face.' And you kept watching your feet all through drill. And you stayed out of step all morning and you took those plowhand strides of yours and walked all over the man in front of you. And you sassed the drillmaster three times. And you generally spoiled the whole morning's drill. Why can't you be a good boy and learn the drills?"

"That's all, Hargrove," he said, mopping his brow; "you're not supposed to salute a non-commissioned officer—just go to bed."

"I don't mean to be bad, sir," I said.

"And that's another thing," the sergeant moaned. "Why must you say 'sir' to the noncommissioned officers and forget to salute the commissioned ones?" He mopped his forehead wearily. "Do you know what the top sergeant told me today?"

"No, sir," I said, twisting my cap and awaiting the worst.

"He said—and don't 'sir' me—that when the battery commander had you on the carpet yesterday you stood there leaning on the table, and you shifted your feet eight times. And you saluted four times during his talk—and when you saluted you gave a European heel-click and bowed. And when the captain dismissed you, you told him, 'Thank you, sergeant' and forgot to salute when you left."

"Was there anything else, sir?" I asked in a whisper.

"That's all, Hargrove," he said, wiping great drops of perspiration from his forehead.

"Thank you, sir," I said. I saluted, clicking my heels, and turned to go.

"Hargrove," the tired voice said. "You're not supposed to salute a noncommissioned — Never mind, Hargrove. Just go to bed."

"Just look at me," the exercise sergeant roars in a voice that would go four miles against the wind. "Just look! I weigh two hundred and eight pounds and I'm in the worst physical condition I've ever been in! I ought to be busted for the way I've allowed myself to get fat and flabby! I'm ashamed!"

You look at the exercise sergeant and wonder what he's leading up to. To you he looks like the "after taking" part of a malted yeast advertisement. He could probably lick his weight in police dogs.

His next statement explains everything. "Now I'm going to show you an exercise that's so simple it's almost ridiculous. Even I can do it. Now, I don't want to hear anybody down there admitting he's in worse shape than I am. If I can do it, you can do it—or else!"

He outlines the exercise and you begin wondering how a contortionist happened to wind up at Fort Bragg. This self-styled "fat and flabby" calisthenics master doesn't have any knees or elbows. You stand there waiting to hear his spine fall apart under the strain, but he comes up all in one piece.

"That's the way I want you boys to do it," he says, beaming cheerfully. You begin to feel your face getting gray and you wonder why a bolt of lightning doesn't come to deliver you from the prospective torture.

"One. Two. Three. Four. Five. Six. Seven. Eight. One. Two—"

The first three or four times are the hardest. After that, you get the swing of it. It's really tame stuff, you decide.

"The next exercise," says the sergeant, "is what we call the quarter, half and full knee bend. It goes like this." He shows you. When you see it, the corners of your mouth go up in a sneer of derision (unless the corporal is looking). Ho Hum, you say to yourself. Why do they take up time with this play?

"Exercise — one, two, three, four—" Quarter, half, full recover. Your knees get That Tired Feeling after the third time. After the sixth time, you feel your eyes getting glassy. After the ninth, you're floating in space. By the time the exercise is over, nothing matters any more.

Before you have marched off the drill field you notice that you still haven't collapsed. In fact, you find to your disappointment that you're beginning to feel good. All limbered up.

Quarantine has been lifted for us of the July 17 contingency. If the sergeant wasn't looking over my shoulder, I'd say it's about time. Before our release from isolation, Army style, I was able to get around and swap lies and gripes with every one of the boys in our group.

A little under 100 per cent of them came up with the same account, which reads as follows: "Our battery has the worst food in the Army. We've got the worst sergeant in the battery. No kidding, though, our platoon makes all the others look crummy. Here two weeks already and I haven't pulled KP or had the sergeant jump me a time yet. Don't tell a soul, but I think they're going to make me a corporal." All of which is a lot of hot air.

Actually, they're fighting to get into the mess hall first at every meal. They're gaining weight and tanning where they used to blister. They're sassing their sergeants, who deplore them as the sorriest bunch of rookies they ever sweated over. Every one of them has been on KP at least once.

By the time Congress says I may go home and be a mere civilian again, I suppose I'll be the best soldier at Fort Bragg. At least I seem to get more individual attention than anyone else. Private tutoring, I always tell the boys.

We were at work the other morning learning how to handle a rifle. The sergeant was putting us through our paces.

"Hargrove," he said with infinite sweetness, "where is the balance of your rifle?"

"This is all the supply sergeant gave me, sir," I said. "I thought it was all here."

The sergeant slapped his forehead and mumbled something furiously under his breath. "Wonder-child," he said, "this (pointing) is the balance of your rifle. I can't imagine why they call it that, unless it's because when you hold the rifle there with one hand, it's balanced." He then went on for a few minutes, explaining a few of the things I had still failed to master.

"Now do you understand it?" he asked, beaming at me with a look made of all sweet accord.

"No, sir," I said.

The sergeant sighed wearily. "Private Hargrove," he said, "right down by the next barracks there's a group of young people who are practicing with rifles for the first time. They haven't had theirs for three days like you have. Run along down there and see if you can keep up with them."

I tried. There was some confusion about the orders, however. At the end of a movement where I wound up with my rifle on my left shoulder, the rest of the detail had theirs on the right. I noticed also that I usually finished a command long before the others.

The sergeant in charge of the detail commenced on this. "You know, Shorty," he said, "you have all of these routines worked out much better than the War Department was able to do them. Where it took them sixteen counts to complete the sixteen-count manual, you always manage somehow to complete it in twelve."

I was still blushing modestly when he called the corporal over. He said something to the corporal, who took me by the elbow and guided me gently around the building at a spot where, he said, the battery officers wouldn't see me drilling and thereby be discouraged.

"This," he said, pronouncing each syllable slowly and distinctly, "is what we have come to call a rifle. R-I-f-l-e. It is used for the purpose of shooting. Primitive man, we are told, did not have a rifle. Primitive man was forced to bring down his supper with a knife, a spear, a stone, a bow and arrows or his own little primitive hands."

I nodded automatically and paid scant attention to all this. I already knew it.

"Today," he continued, "civilization has been improved upon to the extent that—" and he went on and on. After that we began at the beginning of the manual of arms and took each command slowly. The corporal sweated for forty-five minutes.

"In the first place you can peel potatoes with a bayonet."

"Are there any questions now, Private Hargrove?"

I thought for a while. "Yes, sir," I said. "That is, yes, corporal. What use will I have for a rifle? I'm going to be a cook."

The corporal mopped his brow. "Well, Private Hargrove," he said, patting me lovingly on the shoulder, "you'll find use for it. Ha! ha! In the first place, you can peel potatoes with a bayonet. And in the second place—if you're as good a cook as you are a soldier—you'll need it every day. After breakfast, lunch, and supper you'll need it to protect yourself from murder at the hands of your comrades in arms."

"See here, Private Hargrove," the sergeant sighed. "Can't you try just once to do something right? Don't you want to be a credit to the platoon? You don't want us to be the worst bunch in the battery after we've been the best for so long, do you?"

"Please, sergeant," I begged him, "couldn't I just stay inside for this once? They'd never miss me at rifle inspection. I'd be very quiet and nobody would ever know."

He ignored the request. "Try hard to remember, private, these few simple things. When the officer reaches the man next to you, open the rifle. When he grabs your gun, don't hang onto it or you'll have a bellyache for two weeks. When he throws it back to you, don't catch it with your chin. And when you get it back, snap the trigger. And heaven help you if you hall this thing up!"

The forces of Destiny placed me second in the front rank at inspection. We stood at attention for three minutes before the inspecting officer approached. For seconds after we brought our rifles up for inspection, a fly which seemed to be a little larger than a June bug landed on my forehead. The sergeant shot a warning glance across my how and I decided to humor the fly. It would go away soon, I told myself, although I knew it wouldn't.

The inspecting officer still had not begun his rounds. He was waiting for us to get off our guard. The fly demonstrated its impatience by stepping up to double-quick in its pacing. "Oh, if I only had you alone!" I thought. The itching nose became more insistent. A gnat made a three-point landing on it and began playing about the left nostril.

I gave the sergeant a glance which said distinctly, "This can't go on much longer. Something's going to pop!" His return glance said, in italicized words, "Bat just one eyelash and I'll break your neck!"

Suddenly the inspecting officer grabbed the rifle from the hand of Grafenstein, who stood beside me. His lightning swoop on the gun, coupled with the speed with which Grafenstein relinquished it, completely paralyzed me. An almost inaudible groan made me look at the sergeant. He was making furious grimaces at me and his face looked as if he was going to burst a blood vessel. He kept wagging his eyes down to the bolt of my rifle. A split second before the officer reached me, I managed to pull the bolt.

I could see the sergeant unloading freight carloads of potatoes for me to peel. I could see the next weekend, with me restricted to quarters while the rest of the platoon enjoyed themselves in town.

The officer reached me several lifetimes later. He looked at my face and sighed wearily. Then, with infinite tenderness, he gently lifted the rifle from my grasp. He inspected it and handed it back to me although he was laying a brick on an orchid or giving a hundred-pound weight to his aged grandmother. He sighed again and passed on to the next man, whose rifle he grabbed with the confidence that the man wouldn't fall apart when he snatched it.

STAGE—SCREEN—RADIO

A NOVEL contribution to Hollywood's and radio's war efforts is the "Sew and Sew" club, headed by Penny Singleton, who's "Blondie" of the air and the screen. Penny organized the club to perform emergency sewing jobs on servicemen's uniforms, ranging from simple repairs to alterations. She has enlisted some of Hollywood's outstanding movie and radio luminaries as members of her unique organization. And anyone who encounters thousands of servicemen on leave in a strange city will realize how valuable it is.

Joe Howard, perhaps the oldest performer in radio, is still one of the most successful, judging by a deal that he recently completed. Joe, singing troubador of the "Gay Nineties Revue," over CBS Monday nights, sold Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer the film rights to "The Time, the Place and the Girl," a hit musical which he wrote and produced several decades ago.

On July 18 Dick Haymes made his debut on the air's "Here's to Romance." July 19 he made screen tests. At one o'clock on the 26th, 20th Century-Fox executives looked at the tests—and at 4:30 Haymes signed a contract to make two films a year for the next seven years. Three months ago he was singing with Tommy Dorsey's band.

Hollywood's oddest summer school is composed of four students—Bonita Granville, Anne Shirley, Kent Smith and Rita Corday. They study Chinese. Their teacher is Edward Dmytryk; he's the director who, following his success with "Hitler's Children," was signed to direct RKO's "Behind the Rising Sun." He began studying Chinese some years ago.

Lou Crosby, radio announcer, will make his film debut as a Nazi soldier captured by Russian guerrillas in "One Hour of Glory," Casey Robinson production for RKO. Announcer for the Lum 'n Abner program, Crosby has one of radio's best speaking voices.

Most radio executives think that summer radio fare should be light and frothy to succeed, but the latest survey figures indicate that the public doesn't agree. "Screen Guild Players," Monday night CBS dramatic series that stars Hollywood's top names, leads all the others in listener popularity, according to Hooper and Crossley survey figures. This is the program on which none of the actors and actresses are paid; the money they would ordinarily receive goes to the Screen Actors guild, to aid indigent movie people.

PATCH TEST FOR TUBERCULOSIS

Parents do not like the idea of any test that means puncturing the child's skin with a hypodermic needle. Needless to say, the child dislikes the idea even more. However, the parents realize that it is important to learn if their youngster is of the type likely to develop tuberculosis, so that methods to prevent this may be immediately used.

Dr. Barton

For years what is known as the patch test on the skin was used, which meant that tuberculin was placed on the skin and a patch of adhesive tape placed over it. This was considered a reliable test but what is called the Mantoux test, where hypodermic needle injects tuberculin under the skin, is now in more general use.

In an effort to test the value of the patch test, Dr. Henry A. Reisman, Jamaica, N. Y., and Maurice Grozin, Flushing, New York, used it in 1,000 patients attending a hospital clinic. All were given both the patch and the Mantoux tests. The results are recorded in the American Journal of Diseases of Children.

The patch test consists of moistening a piece of paper toweling with tuberculin, allowing it to dry. This piece of paper is placed on a small square of adhesive tape and then applied to the skin with paper moistened with tuberculin next to the skin. This is allowed to remain for one or two days. If the test is positive (child more likely to develop tuberculosis) the skin is red, with little raised blisters which may break down. In the Mantoux test the skin will likewise be greatly reddened if child is positive.

Drs. Reisman and Grozin state that the patch test has the following advantages. 1. It is painless and does not frighten the child. 2. It requires no boring, puncturing, scratching or rubbing of skin. 3. It requires no needles or syringes. 4. There are no instruments to sterilize. 5. There is no danger of infection. 6. There is less risk of damaging the tissues. 7. There is no fear of a reaction where patch is applied or any shock to the system. 8. Technic of the method is simple. 9. The size of the reaction will be no larger than surface of skin covered by adhesive tape.

Fever May Indicate Infection Is Present

The cause of any rise in temperature may be due to some functional disturbance, some natural or harmless condition such as a stomach upset—or to some infection in the body.

How can the physician tell if the rise in temperature is due to some natural or harmless disturbance or to infection?

In the Wisconsin Medical Journal, Dr. Max J. Fox, Milwaukee, states that persistent low grade fever or rise in temperature occasionally follows some infection for some time. If this rise in temperature is prolonged for two or more weeks after the infection has passed, what is called the pyrexia (high temperature) test should first be tried to find out the causes.

The temperature in children seems to go up and down readily without apparent cause, and children in whom the rise in temperature is due to some functional or natural condition, not to infection, should be allowed to be on their feet.

The pyrexia test is as follows: The patient is given a series of four 3-5 grain doses of one of the coal tar products—acetanilid, salicylic acid, antipyrin, acetanilid or others—at four-hour intervals and the temperature is recorded every two hours. The usual effect is a fall in temperature in two hours after each dose and a rise by the end of four hours. The patient is then given no drug for 24 hours, to allow the drug to get out of system, and is then given a sleeping or quieting drug. The temperature is recorded every two hours for the following 24 hours. If the temperature is normal or below normal for 10 to 18 hours, it is assumed that the fever is not due to infection and the patient is allowed to go about his usual work or activities.

This is a simple method of finding out whether or not any infection is present. If present, child remains in bed and does not spread infection. If no infection is present, the child can return to school safely.

GOD GIVES LAWS FOR HIS PEOPLE

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 23:1-9; Galatians 3:23-28; 5:13-14.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself.—Luke 10:27.

Our God is a God of order. To have order we must have law, hence God gave His people not only the fundamental law of humanity's moral sense of right and wrong, and the Ten Commandments which are the basis of all codes of law, but also those detailed regulations needed for the law's interpretation.

The law of God was not intended to establish a legalistic system of salvation by work, but, as revealed in the New Testament, it was to guide and bring us to Christ, in whom it finds its true fulfillment.

These are matters of fundamental importance and suggest the need of a careful study of our three Scripture portions.

I. The Law Established (Exod. 23:1-9).

At Sinai the Israelites were brought into the presence of God in a dramatic and solemn assembly to hear the words of God from the mountain. These were later written as the Ten Commandments on the tables of stone. Here they learned in a new way of the majesty, the righteousness, and the love of God.

The Ten Commandments are recognized as the foundation on which all legal codes, ancient and modern, are built. They cover man's relation to God and his relation to his fellow man. They are unsurpassed as a comprehensive and compact statement of the moral law.

The passage in Exodus 23 gives us some of the rules and regulations for daily life which are in a sense an interpretation of the law. This portion gives us an idea of the type of lawa provided by God for His people and reveals "the moral flavor of the whola divine legislation."

The thing which impresses us as we read of the divine requirements of justice toward all, of love for one's enemies, of refraining from false witness, of refusing all bribery, is that God's standards are very high.

God's law is good, it is right, of divine quality and perfect purity. It has, however, an even higher purpose than providing direction for life. We learn of that as we hear

II. The Law Described (Gal. 3:23-28).

What was the purpose of the law? It was and is a servant of God to lead the needy sinner to Christ. The word "tutor" in verse 24 does not refer to one who teaches, but the servant who saw to it that the school boy, possibly a bit reluctant, arrived at his destination.

The law convicts of sin and makes it evident to the repentant one that he needs divine help if he is ever to meet its demands. The law really puts a man in prison (kept in ward," v. 23), and makes him look to Christ to set him free.

When one trusts Christ he comes into the place of a son. He enters upon a spiritual maturity which makes it no longer necessary to have a tutor directing and disciplining him. He has entered into a new relationship by faith, and is a child of God.

Does this mean that the law has been set aside or abrogated? Not at all. Jesus Himself said, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law . . . I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill" (Matt. 5:17). This is our third point.

III. The Law Fulfilled (Gal. 5:13, 14).

Paul had warned against the folly of legalism. In Christ men are free from a slavish bondage to the law. But men, desiring to substitute license for liberty, were using the grace of God as an excuse for self-indulgence and sin.

Christ has set aside all the ceremonial requirements of the law, for He became the perfect, once-for-all sacrifice for sin, which was infinitely superior to all the offerings of the Old Testament law. He thus fulfilled the type of the offerings.

The moral requirements of the law were gathered up in Him, and in Him we have only one law to fulfill, the law of love. Obedience to that law meets all the moral requirements of the Old Testament law.

Liberty to the Christian is not a freedom to do as he pleases, not "an occasion to the flesh" that it may live in selfishness and sin. We are free only to be bound by the blessed law of love.

The tablets of stone were (and still are) important. Their laws have never been set aside or withdrawn. But in Christ God has done what He spoke of through Jeremiah the prophet, He has put His law in the Christian's inner being, and has written it in his heart. (Jer. 31:33).

BEDTIME STORY

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

CHATTERER HAS SUCH A DREADFUL DAY

Chatterer the Red Squirrel was feeling quite like himself—he felt that he had gotten the best of Sammy Jay the day before. To be sure, he hed hed to get corn for Sammy, but he had not had to go to Farmer Brown's corncrib for it, and he knew that it wes the fun of seeing him take thet risk that Sammy wanted more than he did the corn. He felt that he hed been smarter than Sammy, and the feeling made him quite like his old self.

"Chickaro end chickaree
Who is there es smart as me?
Chickero and Chickaree
Sharper wits you'll never see!"

Now that was boasting, and boasting is one of the most foolish habits in the world. But Chatterer elways was e boaster, end probably always will be. So he whisked in and out of the old stone wall and said this over end over while he weited for Sammy Jay to eppear. He had not gone over to Farmer Brown's corncrib this morning for his breakfast, because he felt sure thet Sammy would come end send him for corn, and he knew that he would heve to go. But he meant to go down to his own storehouse in the hollow reil on the edge of the cornfield, end he could eet his fill there. So he scempered ebout and wished that

He suddenly swooped down.

Sammy would hurry up, for he wes hungry.

At last Sammy came, end just es Chatterer expected, he demanded the corn that Chatierer had promised to get for him whenever he should esk for it. Right eway Chetterer started for the cornfield, running elong the fences. He elweys did like to run along fences, end though it was a long way down there he didn't mind, for the run mede him feel fine. As he ran he kept chuckling to himself to think how smart he hed been to think of that storehouse and e wey to keep his promise to Sammy Jay without running any risk to himself. He was whisking along the fence on the edge of the cornfield and hed almost reeched the hollow reil where he hed stored the corn. He stopped to sit up on e fence post and bosst once more.

"Chickero end Chickaree
Who is there es smart—"

He didn't finish. Instead, his tongue seemed to stick to the roof of his mouth end his little black eyes looked as if they would pop out of his head. Sitting on e post close to the hollow reil was e straight black form wetching him with cruel, hungry-looking eyes. It wes Roughleg the Hewki Chatterer gave e little gasp of fright. He whirled around end started back elong the fence es fest as he could make his legs go. Instantly Roughleg spread his great wings end sailed after him. Chetterer hadn't gone the length of two rails before Roughleg was over him. With his great cruel claws spread wide he suddenly swooped down. Chatterer dodged to the underside of the reil just in time, the very nick of time! Roughleg screamed with disappointment, and that scream hed such e fierce sound that Chatterer shivered all over.

How he ever got back to the Old Orchard he hardly knew himself. Ever so meny times he just menaged to dodge those great claws. But he did get there et last, out of breath end tired end frightened. There set Sammy Jay waiting for his corn. He pretended to be very engry beceuse Chetterer hed nene and threetened to go streight to the Green Forest and tell Shedow the Weesel where Chatterer wes living. There wes nothing for Chatterer to do but to go over to the corncrib as soon as he had rested a little.

"It's been a dreedful dey, a perfectly dreedful dey," said Chetterer to himself as he curled up in bed for the night. "I wonder—I wonder how old Roughleg heppened to be sitting on thet fence post this morning." But Semmy Jay didn't wonder—he knew.

Watch Your Kidneys! Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

Boone County's Quota Set at $732,900.00 For Third War Loan Drive

The quota for the THIRD WAR LOAN drive for Boone County, beginning September 9th, has been fixed as follows;

Series E. Bonds $145,900.00; Series F & G Bonds $27,000.00; Other Bonds 560,000.00; Total quota $732,900.00.

Banks will not be permitted to subscribe for any of this amount which means that individuals, firms and corporations, except banks, are expected to subscribe for this total amount if we are to reach Boone County's quota. This is more than twice the amount of our quota last April drive. The citizens of Boone County will have to subscribe for double the amount they subscribed for last April and those who did not subscribe in April will be expected to make liberal subscriptions in this drive. We have many loyal citizens who have subscribed liberally in the first and second War Loan drives and will very probably do so again even resorting to borrowing in order to help in these drives, but we have any number of people well able to purchase bonds who have not done so in any of the past drives. This condition can not continue to exist, as this is every ones war and every one is expected to help to their very limit. Just because one does not have the money lying idle is no excuse for not subscribing. The banks will carry your note for a few months at the same rate the bond bears until you have something to sell and then pay off your note. Begin making your arrangements to subscribe when the drive starts September 9th.

Bonds to be offered are as follows; Series E, F, and G; Tax Savings Notes; U. S. Treasury 2½% bonds due 1966, callable 1964; U. S. Treasury 2% bonds due 1953, callable 1951; and U. S. Treasury ⅞% bonds due September 1, 1944. All bonds will be dated and draw interest from September 15th except the Series E, F, and G, which bear interest from the first of the month in which issued.

The Victory Fund Committee and the War Savings Staff have been merged into what is now the WAR FINANCE COMMITTEE. A. B. Renaker, who has served as Chairman of the Victory Fund Committee in the First and Second War Loan drives has been requested to continue as Chairman of the War Finance Committee, and A. D. Yelton, who has served as Chairman of the War Savings Staff has been requested to serve as Vice Chairman of the War Finance Committee. Both of these gentlemen have accepted and ask for your loyal support in the approaching drive. The following precinct Chairmen, who so faithfully served in the past drives, will continue as chairmen in this drive; Howard Huey, Petersburg; John L. Conner, Hebron; C. E. McNeely, Grant; Miss Lillian Bristow, Union; C. F. Blankenbeker, Florence; Chas. W. Thompson, Walton; G. C. Ransom, Verona; R. L. Green, Beaver; Thomas Huff, Hamilton; W. H. Presser, Carlton; C. Liston Hempfling, Constance; and C. D. Benson, Burlington.

Each of these precinct Chairmen are expected to set up their own organization in their respective precincts by selecting a lady precinct Chairwoman and such other workers as may be necessary to make a house to house canvas.

Precinct quotas will be announced at a later date.

Do not wait for some one to call on you when the drive starts, but go to your bank and make your subscription. Also volunteer to your precinct chairman to help him secure subscriptions.

Every member of this committee is a busy man or woman and working without pay or hope of reward of any kind, except to do their bit on the home front in helping to raise funds for our Government's war needs to bring this war to a speedy victory.

When you lie down at night on your bed in your comfortable home, thousands of miles from the roar of our ememy's bombs, think of those courageous soldiers who are trying to sleep on the bare ground with shells bursting around them, risking their lives for all of us here at home, many of whom will never return. If you will do this and have not done your part in purchasing bonds in the past, we believe you will arise the next morning and go to your precinct Chairman or to your bank and offer your services and make a liberal subscription in helping Boone County raise its quota.

Propose Milk Price Increase

A Federal hearing is being held at the Netherland Plaza Hotel in Cincinnati on Wednesday of this week on a proposed increase paid producers in whole milk prices from $3.50 per cwt for class 1 milk to $4.35 per cwt. Other classes of milk are to be increased in proportion.

Farmers, dealers and others will have an opportunity to express to the administor why or why not the price paid to producers should be increased. Local dairymen have incurred heavy increased costs in feed, labor and equipment in producing milk. Most dairymen feel that an increase in price is necessary.

Mr. Forest Chapman, who broke his arm several days ago is getting nicely at this writing.

School Programs Being Discussed

This week will bring many educational problems to the front. The K. E. A. and the State Department of Education are sending officials on a tour of visitation to the regional districts for the purpose of conferring with school administrators on the local problems that confront them and on the statewide legislative program which has the joint-sponsorship of these organizations.

The tour of investigation and conference which paused for a day each at Murray, Madisonville, and Elizabethtown last week will make one day periods for counsel this week at Louisville, Covington, and Richmond.

The officials of the State Department who are in the entourage are: Dr. John W. Brooker, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, Dr. Ralph Woods, Director of Vocational Education, George L. Evans, Director of Finance, Dr. R. E. Jaggers, Director of Teacher Training and Certification, and Gordie Young, Assistant Superintendent of Public Instruction. These officials check up on the shortage of teachers, the details of transportation with reference to the care and protection of children, and the safe-guarding of the rights of schools and school officials. One important phase of the conferences is the stimulation of interest in vocational education, community enterprises, and conservation. This work is directed by the Department of Vocational Education and is under joint Federal and State support. Concrete local results may be observed in the canning centers scattered over the state.

The K. E. A. officials are promoting interest in their legislative program which asks the state to make provision for the education of all its children and to guarantee that in the future schools will not have to close for lack of teachers.

Another important event of the week in education circles is the conference at Eastern State Teachers College which begins Thursday, August 26th, and continues for one week. The purpose of this conference is to study ways and means of Improving the Quality of Living through School Leadership. The conference is sponsored by the colleges of the state and will consider the following topics in connection with this theme: Leadership of the School, Organization of its Program, Social and Economic Problems of the Community, Resources of the Community, Quality of Living and its Relation to the Curriculum, the Daily Touch with Everyday Problems of Living.

Dr. J. E. Brewton of Peabody College and Dr. Mary James, specialist in Elementary Education associated with T. V. A. will be consultants.

Mr. Brice Vaallandingham, with the Standard Oil Co. of Erlanger and Mrs. Dr. Rich of Dry Ridge were guests Tuesday of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Dave Vallandingham of Walton.

Joan Kiger Released Under $25,000 Bond

Relatives of Joan Kiger, 16-year-old suspect in the slaying of her father, Carl C. Kiger, Vice Mayor of Covington, Ky., and her six-year-old brother, Tuesday night were seeking another hospital haven for the girl after she was ordered to leave the psychiatric clinic at General Hospital.

Sent to the clinic Monday night a few hours after her release from the Boone County Jail in Burlington, Ky., under $25,000 bond, the girl was ordered dismissed by City Manager C. O. Sherrill.

Sherrill said Tuesday that her admittance by Dr. John Romano, clinic director, at the request of her physician, Dr. R. J. Ertel, Covington, was not in accordance with policy.

He pointed out that to be eligible for admittance to General Hospital a patient should be a resident of Cincinnati, a resident of a city with which the hospital has a contract or an emergency patient. He said the Kiger girl was not eligible under any of these provisions.

The girl was still a patient there late Tuesday afternoon, A. G. Turner, business agent, said, adding that arrangements to move her were being made with Dr. Ertel.

Dr. Romano was quoted as saying she was admitted for a study to determine whether "she is emotionally sick."

Fred Williamson, 32 East Orchard Road, Fort Mitchell, Ky., the girl's uncle, said he did not know where the girl would be taken.

Taken into custody first as a material witness, then as a suspect accused of the slayings, Joan was held in jail until Monday afternoon. Then she was released on bond pending action by the grand jury which will convene in December.

Sheriff Jake Williams, Boone County, said he was continuing to investigate various aspects of the case. Some of the blood-stained bed clothing in the Kiger residence will be sent to the crime laboratory at Northwestern University, Evansville, Ill., for examination within a day of two, Sheriff Williams said.

NOTICE

A letter has just come from The State Department of Health, saying that due to shortage of supplies, they will be unable to give us the X-ray Clinic promised in September, but will let us know as soon as they are able to get their material. It is hoped that it will not be long before the X-ray Clinic can be arranged.

Farm Help Needed Now

Farmers on many farms are badly in need of help during the next few weeks according to Will Smith, County Farm Labor Assistant. Most applications are for farm help or to harvest the tobacco crops.

Six applications for help by the month to do general farm, dairy and poultry work are also now on file at the county agent office in Burlington.

Those farmers who have their work caught up so they could do a few days work for other farmers and do not have a local need are urged to notify the county office and secure a list of farmers needing help. Anyone who wishes a full time job or knows of anyone who wants a full time job on the farm should contact the County Agents Office.

Income Tax Man To Visit County

Collector of Internal Revenue S. R. Glenn announces that a deputy from his office will visit Burlington on September 10 thru 11, 1943, for the purpose of assisting individual taxpayers in preparing their declaration returns. Mr. Glenn says the new Revenue Acts is in many particulars different from the laws previously in effect. Special attention is called to the groups of taxpayers who will be required to file their declaration returns by September 15.

Who Must Make A Declaration

A declaration must be made by every citizen or resident of the United States if he comes within any of the following groups:

(1) SINGLE OR MARRIED BUT NOT LIVING WITH SPOUSE at the date prescribed for the making of the declaration (whether or not head of a family) if he had for 1942, or reasonably expects to have for 1943—

(a) gross income of more than $2,700 from wages subject to withholding; or

(b) gross income of $500 or more from all sources other than wages subject to withholding.

(2) MARRIED AND LIVING WITH SPOUSE at the date prescribed for the making of the declaration, if he had for 1942 or reasonably expects to have for 1943—

(a) gross income from wages subject to withholding which, when added to his spouse's gross income from wages, exceeds $3,500; or

(b) gross income from sources other than wages subject to withholding which, when added to his spouse's gross income from such sources, exceeds $100, and also his gross income from all sources exceed $624 for 1943 or the aggregate gross income from all sources of both spouses amounts to $1,200 or more for either 1942 or 1943.

Farmers are not prohibited from filing declaration returns by September 15, but are given until December 15 to file declaration returns if 80% or more of their gross income is from farming activities.

The Collector says that the many changes made cannot be explained in a short notice, but that his deputy is familiar with the law and is being sent here to be of real service to the taxpaying public. The service is absolutely free. Collector Glenn urges the taxpayers of this county to see the deputy and let him help them with their income tax problems.

The Annual Meeting of all association members will be held the following Saturday, September 4th.

Mr. White states that all loss claims must be on file with the association or one of the directors before this Saturday. Directors of the Association are: John T. Stevens, Hamilton-Carlton District; L. H. Congleton, Burlington, Florence; Chas. W. White, Petersburg-Grant; Chas. B. Beall, Hebron-Constance; Russell Sparks, Beaver-Union; and Walter Johnson, Walton-Verona.

Payment for losses will be made at the annual meeting on September 4th. The Association as a cooperative group has rendered a splendid protection service to more than 100 sheepmen in the county. It has served both to give protection and to give sheepmen greater confidence in the local sheep industry.

Seed Grain Scarce

Wheat, rye and barley seed are very difficult to get according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent.

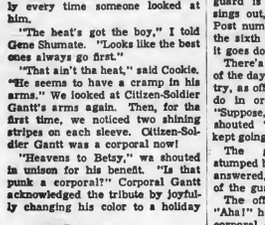
Farmers who have seed grains of good quality are urged to save them for seed. Farmers who expect to buy these seeds should do so immediately. All cultivated land should be seeded to a winter cover crop at the earliest possible date. Don't delay in getting your seeds and be disappointed.

See Here, Private Hargrove!

by Marion Hargrove

W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: Private Marion Hargrove, late of the editorial staff of the Charlotte (N. C.) News, has been inducted into the army, classified as a cook and has spent a large share of his "spare" moments on KP duty. He has taken time out, however, to advise prospective doughboys to "paint the town red" before induction and once in the army to "keep an open mind" as the "first three weeks are the hardest." His constant assignment to KP is the despair of his sergeant who believes Hargrove will never learn to be a crack soldier. His last experience was a rifle inspection in which he fared badly. Now he begins a new episode concerning advancement in rank.



CHAPTER IV

Selectee Joseph G. Gantt, late of Liberty, South Carolina, came out for reveille this morning with a grin you could have used for a foot rule. He held both his arms against the front of his shirt in a queerly strained posture and blushed happily every time someone looked at him.

"The beat's got the boy," I told Gene Shumate. "Looks like the best ones always go first."

"That ain't the heat," said Cookie. "He seems to have a cramp in his arms." We looked at Citizen-Soldier Gantt's arms again. Then, for the first time, we noticed two shining stripes on each sleeve. Citizen-Soldier Gantt was a corporal now!

"Heavens to Betsy," we shouted in unison for his benefit. "Is that punk a corporal?" Corporal Gantt acknowledged the tribute by joyfully changing his color to a holiday

"Heavens to Betsy," we shouted in unison for his benefit. "Is that punk a corporal?"

red. The grin widened until his ears hung perilously on the brink of his lips. It took him half the morning to sober his spirits to working conditions.

Corporal Gantt has been in the Army exactly four months. He had been an acting corporal for three weeks before he got his stripes.

Heaven grant him strength for the ordeal ahead.

The term "buck private" was explained to us this afternoon. It refers to the Old Army Game, "passing the buck." The sergeant is first called on the carpet for a mistake in his platoon. The sergeant seeks out the corporal and gives him a dressing-down. The corporal passes the buck by scalding the ears of the private. The private doesn't even have a mule to kick, so he can't pass the buck any farther. He keeps it. That makes him a buck private.

The Army, I find, has many subtle ways to trap the unwary into volunteering for work. First there was the sergeant over at the Reception Center who came through the recreation hall one afternoon calling for "Private Smith." Four men answered. All four were put to work picking up cigarette stubs.

On the call, "Anybody in here know how to handle a truck?" don't speak up. The last three were seen later pushing a hand truck up the battery street to haul rifle racks.

Corporal Henry Ussery is to date the most dangerous conscriptor. This week he came into the squadroom to ask if anyone was good at shorthand. Three citizen-soldiers admitted that they were.

"Report to the kitchen," the corporal laughed. "The mess sergeant says he's shorthanded on dishwashers."

"One of the most solemn and responsible trusts of a soldier," Sergeant "Curly" Taylor said today, "is his guard duty." Sergeant Taylor, who has been in the Army for nineteen years and probably knows more about guard duty than any man in Fort Bragg, is teaching us about guard duty now.

The soldier is called to this duty about once a month. For a twenty-four-hour period, he is on two hours, and off four hours, and he "walks his post in a military manner," guarding the peace and possessions and safety of a part of the post. He is responsible only to a corporal of the guard, a sergeant of the guard, an officer of the day, and his commanding officer.

The guard, or sentry, is known chiefly to the reading and movie-going public by two expressions, "Halt, who goes there?" and "Corporal of the guard! Post number three!" The former, Sergeant Taylor said with his best poker-face, has given the Army considerable worry at times.

According to the sergeant, the guard is instructed to give the "halt" order three times and then shoot. Over-enthusiastic rookies from the back counties, he said, had been known to go like this: "Halt halt halt! Ka-POW!" (You can believe it or leave it; I never question what the sergeant says.)

There was one rookie guard, he said, who halted him, questioned him and allowed him to pass. After he had gone several steps, the sentry again shouted, "Halt!" Sergeant Taylor came back and wanted to know—politely, of course—how come. "My orders," said the guard, "say to holler 'Halt' three times and then shoot. You're just on your second halt now!"

The other popular expression is the come-a-running call that goes up the line to the guardhouse when a guard takes a prisoner or "meets any case not covered by instruction" (General Order No. 9). If the guard is on the seventh post, he sings out, "Corporal of the guard! Post number seven!" The guard on the sixth post picks up the cry and it goes down the line like that.

There's the story about the officer of the day who questioned a new sentry, as officers of the day frequently do in order to test the sentries. "Suppose," the OD asked, "that you shouted 'halt" three times and I kept going, what would you do?"

The guard was apparently stumped by the question. Finally he answered, "Sir, I'd call the corporal of the guard."

The officer of the day gloated. "Aha!" he said. "So you'd call the corporal of the guard, would you? And just why would you call the corporal of the guard?"

This time the answer was prompt and decisive—and correct. "To haul away your dead body, sir!"

Heroes are born, not made.

There's one job here that is nothing but goldbricking in itself. That's the latrine orderly detail. You go to work after lunch and spend the rest of the afternoon watching the fire in the water heater and feeding it regularly—every two hours. The next morning you sweep and mop the washroom and spend the rest of the time until lunch watching the fire again. All in all, you lead a lazy, carefree existence.

There was a slip-up somewhere yesterday. I was latrine orderly instead of a KP. It was probably the mess sergeant's idea.

The boys started out after lunch for an afternoon of drilling in the warm Carolina sunshine and learning to drive trucks across ditches.

An hour later, I decided to take a casual look at the boiler. When I opened the furnace-room door, a blast of strong brownish smoke struck me to the ground. I lay there for several minutes, tapping my forehead thoughtfully, while more smoke poured out.

When it still hadn't slackened after five minutes, I crawled under the layer of smoke to the boiler. There the sickening vapor was, pouring nonchalantly through clinks in the door.

"Don't come telling me about it," said Sergeant "Ma" Davidson. "Take out the pipes and clean them. All of them."

I had to see the top sergeant to get my instructions. When I returned to Sergeant Davidson I was happy again.

"Ma," I told him, "the top kick says for you to supervise the job."

The sergeant was furious with rage and frustration. I grabbed a screwdriver and he grabbed Private Downer, who had a black mark by his name for not wearing his identification tag. The three of us started work.

First, put out the fire in the boiler. Shake it down, throw ashes on it. It still burns. Shake it down more, throw sand on it. Still burns. Close the bottom door, shake it down more, throw ashes and sand on it. Curse it. After too long, it dies.

The man who devised the system for connecting an indoor boiler and an outdoor chimney should be parched with his own pipes and stuffed with oily soot.

Unscrew a pipe, lift it gently, coax it from its socket. Easy does it. Careful there. When you have it almost out, inhale for your sigh of relief. Crash! The whole network of pipes bounces off the floor scattering ashes and soot over half the battery area.

After half an hour of scrubbing and wiping the interior regions of all the pipes, they're ready to go up again. All but one of them are in place and the last one is ready to be fitted. Careful there! Easy, now! Watch out! Catch it! CRASH!

The boys come in from the drill field at 4:30 and head for the showers. There is no hot water.

"Get a load of that Hargrove," they fume, in an unnecessarily nasty manner. "He gets a job where all he has to do is throw a shovel of coal on the fire every two hours. And then when we come in, there ain't no hot water. There ain't even no fire. Throw the bum out."

I grinned weakly as I reported to the supply sergeant for work. "You must be that nice Sergeant Thomas W. Israel I've heard so many nice things about."

"No, little man," he said. "I'm the nice Sergeant Israel you've been running your loud mouth about. I'm the nice sergeant who always gives you the wrong clothing sizes and hides your laundry and does all those awful things you've been telling about me."

"So help me, sergeant," I protested. "I never named thee but to praise. Somebody's been trying to poison your mind against me."

"I am also the nice sergeant," he said, "who is going to let you earn your seventy cents today. Take off your fatigue blouse, my man, and prepare to sweat. Today we make progress. We are going to unpack rifles."

It seems to me that when the manufacturer prepares to pack a box of Army rifles, his cruel streak comes out at its worst. From the look of the rifles, he has his three-year-old daughter prepare a compound of molasses, pitch, and used motor oil—the gooier the better. He slings each gun into the resulting mess, sloshes it around for a while, and then lays it neatly into the box.

You use a swab about the size of a tablecloth to wipe the grease from the rifle. When you're halfway through the first rifle, you have to use the gun to wipe the grease from the cloth. When you have finished, you need a large coal shovel to wipe the grease off yourself.

There is nothing so conducive to itching as the inability to scratch. Just when the molasses-pitch-axle grease mixture covers your hand to the point where you can't see the outlines of the fingers, that left nostril starts tingling. At first it itches only a little and you decide to suffer it. So you don't wipe your hands on the seat of your trousers. Instead you pick up another rifle and your hand sinks to the elbow in the goo which wraps it. This is the stage where your nose gets peevish and impatient and decides to itch in earnest.

Finally, you decide to give in. You wipe your hands—an operation which takes a good three or four minutes for satisfactory results. You lift your hand to scratch your nose, only to find that your nose isn't itching any more.

I was doing fairly well this morning, even when you take the itch into consideration, until the mess sergeant happened to stroll by.

"Hello, little man," he sings gaily, with a horrible gleam in his eyes. "You've not been around to see me for a long time. Aren't mad, are you?"

I look at my hands, at the rifle, at the old shoe, and at the mess sergeant. I hold my tongue. Health is wealth.

"We miss you terribly in the kitchen," he coos, "even when you go griping around that my food is the worst in the Army. I just saw the first sergeant and I asked him to let you be a KP just as soon as he can spare you. Oh, we're going to do wonders to that kitchenware, you and I."

He pats me on the forehead with ominous tenderness and departs.

The sergeant yelled out of the window at me, so I dropped my broom and went upstairs.

Five paces away, he turns for a parting shot. "Blabbermouth!" he snorts.

I suppose he's good to his mother, though.

The sergeant yelled out the window at me, so I dropped my broom in the battery street and went upstairs. He was sitting on the foot locker, thoughtfully rubbing his chin with the handle of his mess-kit knife.

"Ralph Oxford got called up to the battery commander's office this morning," he said, "and do you know what the Old Man gave him?"

"I've got a pretty good idea," I said. "If he gave him what he gave me when I got called up, it has four letters, starts with an h and ends with an I."

The sergeant closed his eyes and slowly shook his head. "Oxford isn't a sore thumb to the platoon like you are," he groaned. "Oxford got a bright red stripe to wear around his sleeve."

"Oxford's no fireman," I told him. "You're dern right he ain't," said the sergeant. "Starting with today, Oxford and Zuber and Roff and Maciejewski and Pappas and Mihalgakakos are acting corporals!"

I knew there must be a moral to all this, so I waited for him to go on.

"Now, why couldn't you have been one of those six boys?" he asked.

PLEURODYNIA—FALSE PLEURISY

Some years ago I wrote about an epidemic of pleurodynia in England. Pleurodynia is an inflammation with pain in muscles of the chest. It is sometimes called false pleurisy—pain in lower part of chest and upper part of abdomen, pain on breathing and with any movement of chest muscles. At that time it was considered an infectious disease, but as symptoms were light, lasted but a short time and no bad effects followed, nothing more was heard about it.

Dr. Barton

It is interesting to learn that an epidemic of pleurodynia is reported in Brooklyn, N. Y. Cases of this disease began to appear in the Red Hook section of Brooklyn in July, 1942. To date at the Long Island College hospital, 166 cases were observed, of which 40 were admitted to hospital. Apparently there were more nose and throat symptoms in these Brooklyn cases than those reported in England, Norway and some parts of the United States.

"The prominent symptoms in adults were fever, severe pain in upper right side of abdomen or lower part of the chest, or both, sufficient to make breathing painful and difficult. The abdominal symptoms were frequently so severe that surgeons were called into consultation. The recoveries were prompt, often within 24 to 48 hours, though further attacks of pain and fever often occurred." In a number of these adult cases, headache, dizziness, lack of interest and fear of light occurred.

In children, in addition to fever and pain in upper abdomen and lower chest, there was sometimes very difficult breathing, vomiting but no diarrhea, severe inflammation of the throat and quick and complete recovery. In most of the infants violent convulsions occurred. Fortunately for physicians, parents and child, the convulsions quickly disappeared.

I am passing this information along, as the symptoms are so severe that the patient suffers as much as if he had heart disease, pleurisy, gall-stone colic, or a surgical condition of the abdomen. That these symptoms disappear so quickly and leave no after affect is much for which to be thankful.

However, when these or similar symptoms appear, the family physician should first be called, as an examination will show whether they are due to pleurodynia or something more serious.

How to Avoid Food Poisoning

In these days when the need and value of food is so much on our minds it is possible that in our efforts to get certain foods we may not watch as closely as we should the foods offered for sale.

The danger signals of food spoilage are: 1. Cans with bulging sides. 2. Glass containers showing seepage over the tops. 3. Food discoloration.

Because of canned goods shortage there has been considerable storing of canned goods, some of which may be kept for longer periods than in former years. It is then doubly necessary to make sure that the can has not become damaged, allowing entry of disease-producing organisms.

Suspected foods should never be tasted to discover spoilage, since even small amounts of some foods infested with organisms can cause illness or death.

Because of the shortage of cans and canned foods, there will be more home-food canners and home canners are reminded that canned foods must be thoroughly sterilized to safeguard against botulism, a highly fatal type of food poisoning which affects the brain. Formerly it was thought that botulism was caused entirely by raw or insufficiently cooked sausage, but lately most cases that have occurred involved vegetables; but fruit, meat and fish were also at times found to be the cause.

Fatal poisoning from commercially canned goods, however, is actually rare.

A further warning is given against buying illegally prepared or distributed meats as a disregard of the usual sanitary measures goes hand in hand with the sale of such products.

BETTER DRESSMAKING

By Ruth Wyatt Spears

CONSERVATION of clothing begins with an ounce of prevention. When we think of where garments wear out first, buttonholes come to mind. Once the material around them becomes frayed the garment is finished so far as good looks is concerned.

The buttonholes of old garment may be reworked; those of inexpensive ready-mades may be reinforced; and those in new garments may be made both smart and substantial with evenly purled stitches.

Three types of worked buttonholes are shown here. 1. The buttonhole with fan stitches at the outside end and reinforcing bar at inside. 2. Buttonhole with bar at both ends. 3. Tailored buttonhole with eyelet at outside end. The process of reinforcing a buttonhole slit with long stitches and overcasting is shown at A and B, in Sketch 1. The position of the needle and thread in making the purled buttonhole stitch is shown at C. The blanket stitch used for the bar is shown at D. Sketch 3 shows the method of marking the tailored buttonhole at A; stitching around marking, at B; punching eyelet, at C; overcasting, D; method of holding reinforcing thread, E and F. The bar at the inside end is shown at G.

BEDTIME STORY by THORNTON W. BURGESS

CHATTERER HITS ON A PLAN

EACH time that Chatterer the Red Squirrel thought himself smarter than Sammy Jay he found that he wasn't as smart as he thought he was, and this always made him feel mortified. He just couldn't admit, even to himself, that Sammy was the smartest, and yet, here he was every day bringing corn for Sammy from Farmer Brown's cornerib whenever Sammy told him to, and running the risk of being seen by Farmer Brown's Boy, all because he hadn't been able to think of some way to outwit Sammy. Once, after he had such a narrow escape from old Roughleg the Hawk, he had tried going down to his storehouse on the edge of the cornfield, but he had found Roughleg on watch and had turned back. From the way Sammy Jay bad grinned when he saw Chatterer coming back, Chatterer had made up his mind that Sammy knew something about how old Roughleg bappened to have found out about that storehouse and so had been on watch.

Now, all this time Sammy Jay was having a great deal of fun out of Chatterer's trouble. Each time that Chatterer thought of a plan to outwit Sammy, he would find that Sammy had already thought of it and a way to make the plan quite useless. You see, Sammy used to spend a great deal of his time when he was alone in the Green Forest pretending that he was in the same fix as Chatterer and then trying to think of some way out of it. So it was that Chatterer never could think of a plan that Sammy hadn't already thought of. And yet there was a way to cheat Sammy out of his fun, though not out of his corn, and it really was the fun of seeing Chatterer so worried that Sammy cared most about. Sammy had thought of it almost at once and it seemed to him that Chatterer was very, very stupid not to think of it, too.

"He will think of it some day and I don't see any way to upset such a simple plan," said Sammy to himself, and then he fell to studying some new way to torment Chatterer.

And at last Chatterer did think of it. It was such a simple plan! Probably that was why he hadn't thought of it before. All he had to do was to go over to Farmer Brown's cornerib at break of day, before anyone in Farmer Brown's house was awake, just as he had been doing, only make two or three trips and store a lot of corn in a safe hiding place in the old stone wall. Then, when Sammy Jay demanded corn he could get it without trouble or danger. He tried it and it worked splendidly. Sammy Jay got his corn, but he didn't get any fun, and he cared more for the fun of seeing Chatterer in trouble than he did for the corn. So, after two or three mornings, Sammy didn't come up to the Old Orchard, and Chatterer chuckled as he stored up the corn—not in one place, but in several places.

Now, while Sammy Jay seemed to have grown tired of corn, he was doing a lot of thinking. He had no idea of leaving Chatterer alone. He just had to think of some way of upsetting Chatterer's simple plan. It was Reddy Fox who finally gave him the idea. He saw Reddy trotting down the Lone Little Path through the Green Forest, and right away the idea came to him. He would tell Reddy where Chatterer was storing the corn in the old stone wall and Reddy would hide close by.

"Of course, I don't want Reddy to catch Chatterer, but I can prevent that by warning him just in time. But he will be so frightened that he won't dare go to that place for corn again in a hurry, and so he will have to go to the cornerib for it," thought Sammy, and hurried to tell Reddy Fox about the place halfway along the old stone wall where Chatterer had hidden his corn.

Frosty Drinks Will Cool You!
(See Recipes Below)

Frost Yourself!

When the thermometer rises to the hundred mark, homemakers look for cool ideas, and thirst-chasers are first on the list. Cooling drinks literally give you a frost and insulate you from the warm rays of Old Man Sun.

In today's column I'm attempting to give you a parade of cool drinks to fit every pocket book, every occasion. They use fruit juices, prepared beverages, prepared drink powders, milk, citrus fruit and of course, plenty of ice. After you've prepared them, find the coolest spot on the porch, sink into the most comfortable chair, and start sipping!

Chilling fruit, juices, milk or beverages is of first importance in preparing your cool drink, but then you've probably already done this. If a survey were made during these summer months, I'm sure it would reveal that a larger percentage of the refrigerator is used for cool drink preparations than any other item.

One of the best bases for a good, cool drink is a citrus fruit. Doesn't it honestly cool you already to think of orange or lemon juice cool and frosty in a glass with tinkling ice? Indeed, it does. There's a scientific fact behind this, for scientists tell us that in hot weather the tissues of the body require more vitamin C than when temperatures are moderate. That's one reason why oranges and lemons are ideal for summer drinks.

If you want something to serve company on a summer evening, here's a drink that will fill any order:

Hollywood Parade.
(Serves 15)
1 pint orange juice
1 pint orange sherbet
1 pint vanilla ice cream
1 pint chilled ginger ale

Beat orange juice, sherbet and ice cream with a whirl type beater until well mixed. Add ginger ale. Stir and serve at once.

Another kind of orange drink which is nice to fix individually for yourself in the afternoon when you're feeling a lag is this:

Orange Cream.
(Serves 1)
1 egg yolk
¾ cup orange juice
¼ cup thin cream or evaporated milk
Sugar, if desired

Beat egg yolk until light, add orange juice and blend thoroughly. Pour into glass and stir in cream. Sweeten to taste. Serve at once.

There are several delightful flavors obtainable in fruit powders that are simply delicious when made into cooling, frosty drinks. Use the directions on the package for mixing, garnish with a cherry and sprig of mint and you have a drink without the trouble of extracting fruit juice. Use the fruit powders also for making light sherbets that solve the dessert problem nicely.

Sherbet.
(Makes over 1 quart)
1 package flavored fruit powder
1 cup heavy cream, well chilled
1 cup sugar
2 cups milk

Dissolve fruit powder and sugar in milk. Turn into freezing tray and freeze ¾ to 1 hour or until slushy. Whip cream until stiff. Add to first mixture and beat through until blended, keeping as cold as possible. Return quickly to freezing tray and freeze at coldest point. When frozen, set cold control back to normal.

The hotter the weather, the more wilted you become. Nothing quite picks you up as a nice salad, and even the thought of cool, crisp greens brings back the starch to your spirits. Here are some suggestions which are perfect for summer:

Ham Supper Salad.
(Serves 4)
2 cups diced cooked ham
1 cup diced celery
2 hard-cooked eggs, diced
¼ cup mayonnaise
1½ teaspoons sweet pickle relish
1½ teaspoons chili sauce
Salad greens

Combine first three ingredients. Then stir in next three ingredients which have been combined together. Mix thoroughly and chill until ready to serve. Serve on any desired salad greens.

Summer Dream Salad.
Watermelon balls
Grapefruit sections
Fresh whole raspberries
Pineapple segments
Orange sections
Honeydew slices
Blueberries
Mint
Salad dressing

Arrange fruit on a bed of salad greens according to a pattern. Serve with salad dressing and garnish with mint sprigs.

Salad Dressing.
2 tablespoons currant jelly
½ cup lemon juice
½ cup salad oil
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon paprika
2 tablespoons granulated sugar or honey
2 teaspoons chili sauce

Crush jelly with fork and beat smooth. Add remaining ingredients and beat with hand beater until blended. Serve over fruit salad or mixed greens.

Sandwich Hints

In making sandwiches, soften butter or margarine before using. Avoid melting butter or margarine as it seeps into bread and makes a greasy filling.

A good way is to mix ½ cup peanut butter, apple butter, or jelly with ¼ cup of butter to extend the butter supply. This makes enough spread for 18 slices of enriched bread.

Varieties of fruit-nut bread, orange bread or cheese bread make a combination that really is a victory special. Wise use of enriched flour saves needed ration points.

Lynn Says:

The Score Card: Good news is in sight with the word that coffee supplies in the country are coming back to normal and present prospects point to an end of coffee rationing by the middle of August. Even the current period for rationing provides more coffee per stamp than has been allowed since rationing came into effect.

Those of you who are canning can get additional supplies of sugar with your stamps to make putting up fruit at home easier.

Fruits and vegetables are scarce this year because of lack of help to pick them, and therefore prices run high. If you possibly can, get in touch with anyone who has crops and offer to help with the picking and packing of them—and also to get your own fruits and vegetables for home canning in much better condition than would be possible if you waited for someone else to do the picking.

ISRAEL'S SIN AND RESTORATION

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 32:7-10; 34:6-9, 27, 28.

GOLDEN TEXT—The Lord is long-suffering, and of great mercy, forgiving iniquity and transgression.—Numbers 14:18.

God is righteous, and cannot look with approval or in forgiveness upon sin until His mercy has been stirred and set free to act by repentance. Then He whose wrath is hotly kindled against man's transgression shows Himself as the tender and gracious God, "keeping loving-kindness for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin."

This grace of God is fully revealed in Christ and the redemption which He brought to man, but is prefigured in the experiences of Israel under the law.

I. God's Wrath Kindled (Exod. 32:7-10).

There are those who would have us think of God as a benevolent old gentleman who is easily boodwinked by clever sinners who can talk fast to cover their iniquity. Even if He does see it, He is supposed to be so tenderhearted that He overlooks their sin.

Such folk bad better read these words, "That my wrath may wax hot." The wrath of God is a real and awful affection of the divine nature and it is revealed against man who sins against His holy law.

The special sin of Israel on this occasion was idolatry, which is the setting up of some material symbol to represent the invisible God. Moses had been with God in the mount for 40 days. He bad been the Lord's representative in their midst. His presence had evidently been the chief stabilizing influence.

Having their eyes set on a man, or a material object to take His place, they had lost sight of the invisible God. So they proceeded to establish this idol which would provide a center of worship. At first it was evidently intended to remind them of God, but soon it led them out into heathen revelry (Exod. 32: 6, 17, 18).

Whatever a man puts between himself and God, even though be may at first intend it to be but a reminder of God, will lead him away from God. Ritual, symbols, theology, scholarship, all good in their places, may become the idols which separate present-day man from God.

II. God's Mercy Invited (Exod. 34:4-9).

Aaron had only a weak "alibi" to offer. The golden calf had practically made itself (see Exod. 32: 24). How quick man is to justify himself instead of admitting his guilt. No doubt our excuses sound just as silly as Aaron's in the ears of God.

Moses knew better. The sin was dealt with in drastic fashion. When one deals with a wild ravenous beast, there is one remedy—"shoot to kill." Not only were the leaders of the wickedness slain, but the ground gold of the calf image was put into water, which all Israel drank. Thus were they all marked as sharing the guilt of this idolatry.

There is a lesson here for us. America is far from God. We need to seek His face in repentance. But let us remember that we (that is, Christian men and women) are a part of America. It is our guilt, and we ought to be on our faces before God, pleading for God's mercy upon our land.

Moses was now ready to seek the Lord's mercy for his wayward people. He is the intercessor, the intermediary. God had a man who bad compassion and love in his heart, and the Lord heard him. Loving-kindness and tender mercy flowed forth in place of flaming anger.

Note that God has not changed. He is the unchangeable One. His wrath is still hot against man's sin, but man has repented, and moved out of God's wrath into His love and grace. That too is always being shown to His obedient children.

III. God's Covenant Renewed (Exod. 34:27, 28).

Moses bad broken the first tablets of commandments. The people had sinned and were not then ready to listen to any word from Jehovah. But now they were prepared to receive it, and God renewed the covenant as He again gave Moses the law.

There is no need for despair in the heart of the one who deals with God. The missed opportunity for obedience and blessing may be gone forever, but God is still on the giving hand ready to meet the returning prodigal, ready to give beauty for ashes (Isa. 61:3) and to restore the years that the locust bas destroyed (Joel 2:25). Amazing grace!

In the keeping of these commandments, Israel was assured of the blessing of God. As we pointed out last week, the real fulfillment of the law came in Jesus Christ, who did not set aside its requirements, but met them all, for all who believe in His name.

Today, due to shipping space, there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men—but you can still send packages to soldiers in the U. Buses Are Carrying More Than Half of All Inter-City Passengers.

Despite war-time restrictions, buses are now carrying more than half of all inter-city passengers and could assume an even greater burden of essential travel if road speed limitations were eased, according to the National Association of Motor Bus Operators.

Many of the restrictions which hampered the bus operators in meeting war time transportation demands have been partially overcome, the association points out, but the industry could make a greater contribution if the highway speed limit for the intercity carriers were raised. The association's report shows that the reduction in maximum speed to 35 miles per hour failed to produce appreciable savings in either rubber or motor fuel so far as the intercity bus industry is concerned. On the other hand, the slower speeds have interfered with the efficiency of bus operation by lengthening schedules 30 per cent, reducing carrying capacity, requiring more manpower in driver and mechanic personnel, and causing undue wear upon engines, transmissions, and clutches.

Leaders of the industry contend that if intercity buses were allowed to operate at a maximum of 45 miles per hour on the open highway, a substantially increased number of passengers could be carried without additional equipment or personnel.

The extent of the industry's contribution to war-time transportation needs is reported in a survey of current operating conditions that was made for the association by impartial investigators. The findings have been presented to government agencies and fact-finding organizations to acquaint them with the vital part the bus industry is playing in the war effort and to indicate how the easing of certain restrictions would enable the highway passenger carriers to assume even greater travel burdens.

"The demand for public transportation has grown to gigantic proportions," said Arthur M. Hall, president of the bus operators organization. "This is because of the tremendous number of men and women in the armed forces and the unprecedented employment in war industries, coupled with the fact that gas and tire rationing has so drastically curtailed the use of privately-owned automobiles. In 1942, the intercity buses carried 692,000,000 passengers and this all-time record will be greatly surpassed this year.

Farmers Holding Sweet Potatoes Double Money.

Farmers who market their sweet potatoes in the fall have sold their crop at the bottom of the market every year for the past 12 years, it was stated this week by Daniel K. Young, State Supervisor of the Food Distribution Administration, on the basis of a recent Government study.

"Without exception in the past decade, sweet potato prices have declined in the fall, touched bottom in November, and have gradually risen to the peak for the season the following spring," Mr. Young said.

"Last November Southern farmers sold their sweet potatoes at an average of $1.03 per bushel, whereas those who hold until May received $2.25, or more than twice as much. In 1941 the November low was 82 cents per bushel, rising to $1.08 the following June. In 1942 the figures ranged from a bottom of 75 cents in November to a top of $1.02 in June. This procedure has been continued for at least 12 years, and perhaps is an unbroken record for many years before that.

"The War Food Administration's support program is based on this record and growers are guaranteed $1.15 for their crop this fall as against $1.65 in rigid bushel containers if they hold their sweet potatoes over until February, March, or April.

"Commercial prices will undoubtedly hold the market up much higher than the support program for farmers who hold their crop until spring, whereas if a flood of sweet potatoes reach the market this fall, the guaranteed support price will probably also be the top."

Farmers were urged by Mr. Young to arrange for storage facilities at once, so their crop can be stored until spring. Details on storage can be obtained from county agricultural agents.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

U. S. Bombers Hit Axis War Plants As Allied Chiefs Ponder Italy's Fate; Reds Push Nazis Back on Two Fronts; Trap Jap Forces in Central Solomons

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these solumns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Sicily's fall came only after stiff fighting such as this, in which British Tommies from the Eighth army advanced through a railroad siding under heavy fire.

SICILY:
Happy Ending

Thirty-eight days after the first Allied troops set foot on Sicily's southeastern shore, the island fell, with 140,000 Axis prisoners reported captured. As Gen. George S. Patton's Doughboys from the Seventh American army swept into Messina to take over the enemy's last stronghold, the Italian mainland loomed two miles away.

Gen. George S. Patton

The fall of Sicily was preceded by the Axis' evacuation of the island behind the rugged action of their rearguards, fighting fiercely from natural defenses in the mountainous terrain. According to Berlin, about 35,000 German troops with all of heavy equipment were hauled to the Italian mainland on small vessels.

The Sicilian campaign was marked by bitter action. In the early landings, American troops withstood strong German counterattacks to establish a beachhead at Gela; Gen. Bernard Montgomery's British columns encountered stiff opposition before Catania, where the Axis machine gunners could hide to advantage in the grain fields; and finally, German units planted in the mountains slowed Allied advances to a steady crawl up the open, craggy slopes before Messina.

Discuss Open City

As President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill came together for their sixth conference in the historic citadel of Quebec, Marshal Pietro Badoglio's Italian military government pressed efforts for the recognition of Rome as an open city. Acting as intermediary, the Vatican was reported to have presented Badoglio's proposals for such recognition to Allied representatives.

Before recognizing Rome as an open city, the Allies insisted that the metropolis be stripped of all military activity. In their bombings of Rome, the Allies concentrated on the San Lorenzo railroad yards.

As Roosevelt and Churchill discussed Italy's fate, British and American bombers loosed a rain of explosives on the Italian industrial centers of Milan and Turin. Waves of four-engined bombers blasted at the famous Caproni aircraft works, chemical plants and the royal arsenal.

RUSSIA:
Nazis Fall Back

Hitler's armies fell back along the central and southern Russian fronts as the Reds' masses of tanks and troops ground forward in bitter action. The Germans put up stiff resistance, slowing the Russians' advance with local counterattacks, and making them pay for every yard gained.

But the sheer weight of the Reds' drive told in the eventual German retreats. In the central sector, the Russians bore down on the important Nazi base of Bryansk, as they moved westward from recently fallen Orel. Farther to the south, Kharkov lay encircled from three sides, and Soviet troops stood at the gates of the once great Pittsburgh of Russia, now a blackened ruin.

OPA:
Changes Made

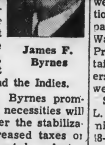
As a result of Office of Price Administration policies, the cost of living dropped fractionally during the last two months and should register a further decline in August, Chester Bowles, new OPA general manager, declared. Aim of the government is to bring prices to the September, 1942, levels, and keep them in line with the stabilization of wages at 15 per cent over the early 1941 figures.

SOUTH PACIFIC:
Slip on Noose

By occupying Vella Lavella island, American troops slipped a tight noose around remaining Japanese forces in the central Solomons. Vella Lavella lies to the north of Kolombangara island, where 8,000 Nipponese stood entrenched. To the south of Kolombangara is New Georgia island, which U. S. doughboys dominated.

As General MacArthur's offensive developed, with the central Solomons in the Americans' grip, the Japanese were left with outposts only in the northeastern area of the islands.

As MacArthur's Solomons' forces wound up for the knockout punch, waves of Allied bombers staged a surprise attack on the Japanese airbase at Weewak, New Guinea, destroying 120 planes and killing 1,500 personnel. Caught unawares, Jap planes were packed solidly on the field when the Allied airmen flew over, proving easy targets. The enemy craft represented reinforcements that had been sent to bolster Jap ground troops at Salamaua to the south, where Allied units had pressed within 15 miles of the big base.



WAGES:
Go Up

Average pay of workers in all manufacturing industries was 95.9 cents an hour in June, the department of labor figures disclose. This is 13 per cent higher than in June, 1942. Weekly earnings averaged $43.35 in June, compared with $43.22 for May. In durable goods factories (makers of tractors, furniture, planes, etc.) the average was $49.37 and in non-durable (canned vegetables, paper products, etc.) the average pay was $34.41 a week. Because of expanding activity, man-hours increased some five million over May.

Employment figures show that there are now 17,100,000 women working, an increase of three million over last year. In the same period number of men employed declined by 2,700,000, from 39,900,000 to 37,200,000. Nearly two million more women are wanted by industry.

HOME FRONT:
Roads Long, Bloody

Tempering increased optimism on the home front, War Mobilization Director James F. Byrnes told the nation "the roads to Berlin and Tokyo are still long, hard and bloody." We have met less than 7 per cent of the enemies' armed forces in Europe, he said, and in the Pacific, the Japanese not only control most of the productive resources of China, but also the great wealth of Malaya and the Indies.

James F. Byrnes

Looking at home, Byrnes promised prices of actual necessities will be scaled down under the stabilization program. Increased taxes or "forced savings" must be adopted to drain off 20 billion dollars of excess purchasing power, he said. And revisions in the government's procurement program will make possible production of some essential civilian goods, he reported.

POST OFFICE

Postal deficit was set at $3,543,12? for the fiscal year ending June 30 when the post office department closed its books. This loss is the lowest since 1919. Last year the deficiency was $11,825,185.

Revenues totaled $961,059,690, an increase of $101,242,199 over last year. The increase almost equalled the entire income for the year 1900. Expenditures amounted to $964,602,812, an increase of $92,960,135. Salaries of employees accounted for 77 per cent of the costs.

DRAFT:
Deferment Grounds

In an effort to provide industry with necessary labor, the War Manpower commission headed by Paul V. McNutt laid down new regulations for Selective Service, making occupation rather than dependency the basis for deferment.

Paul V. McNutt

At the same time, the WMC broadened the list of jobs which are non-deferrable, and placed certain positions requiring high skills at the bottom of the draft rolls.

In effect, the new regulation puts teeth into the order to draft fathers after October 1, since dads holding non-essential jobs will be called ahead of others employed in essential industry. Provision has been made, however, for fathers to switch to essential occupations.

BEER:
Drought for Duration

Beer is scarce, and will probably be scarcer soon, War Production board officials indicate. Demand is running some 50 per cent above production, and areas away from breweries face a real "drought." Communities near a source of supply will fare somewhat better.

Restrictions on materials of all kinds are limiting brewers to production of 63 million barrels. Last year they turned out 68 million, and that wasn't enough to satisfy everyone. Malt supplies have been reduced by 7 per cent, and bottles by 35 per cent. Caps are bard to get. Transportation is irregular.

The WPB has ordered that 13 per cent of the beer must be set aside for servicemen. It contains 3.2 per cent alcohol or less, lower than most commercial beers.

Air Hero at 16

Tired of working on the farm, and doing odd jobs around Elmwood, Ill., 14-year-old Clifford R. Wherley took a last look at the old home early one morning and started down the road toward an adventure which saw him a hero in the air force at 16.

CLIFFORD WHERLEY

Later that morning, Wherley gave his age as 18 and was inducted into the army. Because he liked to shoot rabbits, squirrels and foxes, he decided to become an aerial gunner.

Wherley's craving for action was soon satisfied. As staff sergeant and turret gunner on a Martin bomber, he participated in 21 missions over North Africa. But when his real age was discovered, the army gave him an honorable discharge, and now he must await his 18th birthday before he can get back into the service.

In the meantime, Wherley will work in the Glenn L. Martin plane factory, helping turn out the bombers in which he rode to such early glory.

RATION BOOKS:
Brown Stamps

Purchase of meat, fats, oils and dairy products will be made through use of brown stamps in ration book No. 3 beginning September 12. However, the last red stamps, X, Y and Z, will remain valid to October 2.

Because the blue stamps, U, V and W for the purchase of processed foods will be good to October 20, ration book No. 2 will not be immediately discarded.

One series of stamps in ration book No. 3 will be used for canned and processed foods when the blue stamps of book No. 2 are exhausted. Book No. 1 will remain valid for shoe rationing. In an effort to enanarl black market operators, new gas coupons will be issued. It is planned to distribute an "F" series to check the use of old coupons which might have been turned in for eventual utilization at the full ration rate after the deadline for the 25 per cent cut.

MINERS:
48-Hour Week

Miners working 42 hours a week were permitted to work an additional six bours at time-and-a-half pay under an order issued by the War Labor board and approved by President Roosevelt. With the $9 obtained for the extra six hours, miners will receive $51 for their 48-hour week.

Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, government operator of the mines, had asked the WLB for the 48-hour week to stimulate production of coal and avert a possible fuel shortage. The 48-hour week formed one of John L. Lewis' proposals for a new contract, along with pay for underground travel of $1.25 a day, which the WLB has been considering.

NORWAY:
Underground Stirring

Apparently moving to suppress 'underground" activities, lately sparked by hopes of Allied invasion, Nazi authorities have placed Norway under virtual martial law. According to Swedish radio reports, a state of siege has been declared for the entire nation. Imprisonment and executions are being employed to suppress all organizations that might be able to assist the Allies in the event of invasion.

ISOLATIONIST CUPID

The nuptial rumor that the Chicago Tribune's Col. Robert R. McCormick was going to wed Mrs. Helen Essary, widow of the Baltimore Sun correspondent, was told to the President recently by one of his aides.

Both Colonel McCormick and Mrs. Essary are ardent isolationists and vigorous critics of the administration. In fact the colonel is considered the leading isolationist of the Midwest, if not the nation, while the Widow Essary, writing in the Washington Times-Herald, is probably the leading lady isolationist in the nation's capital.

So the President received word of this isolationist romance with considerable interest.

"I wonder," be mused, "what their progeny will be like."

Note—Lster, Mrs. Essary heard about the President's remark and telephoned one of the White House aides to find out precisely what had been said. She did not comment as to whether the rumor of matrimony were true or untrue, but she showed great feminine curiosity regarding the President's comment.

DAY VS. NIGHT BOMBING

When Churchill and Roosevelt were in Casablanca, the British prime minister had a friendly argument with U. S. air generals regarding the feasibility of daylight bombing. Churchill was against it, arguing that the British system of night bombing was much safer, did more damage to the enemy.

However, latest figures just received by the war department show that Gen. Ira Eaker was right in sticking to day bombing. These figures show that U. S. bombers have knocked out Nazi fighter planes at a rate ten times greater than the British.

Here are the figures: In July U. S. airmen destroyed 500 Axis planes, lost 108 bombers of their own. In other words we knocked out five times as many planes as we lost.

In the same months, the British knocked out 129 enemy planes, but lost 238 of their own. In other words, the British lost two planes for every one they knocked out.

The British were operating at night when they could not see the enemy so well, but also when the enemy could not see them. American planes, operating in the daylight, could better concentrate on enemy fighter planes, but also were better targets for the enemy.

INFLATION REMEDY

The President has a non-inflationary solution to organized labor's demands for wage increases to meet higher living costs: namely, non-negotiable bonds, payable after the war.

Roosevelt revealed this secret during a confidential talk with R. J. Thomas, president of the United Auto Workers union, on price rollbacks, strikes and the War Labor board's Little Steel formula. Here is the summary of his views:

Prices. Roosevelt stated that he would make a vigorous attempt to roll back prices. He told Thomas that he would prefer that congress provide the money, but that, failing this, he would use either RFC or Commodity Credit corporation funds to restore the following food prices to their September, 1942, normal: Meat, canned goods, potatoes, milk and milk products.

It would be too difficult, the President said, to attempt a rollback of clothing and personal services. He pointed out that rents already have been rolled back to March, 1941.

Little Steel Formula. Roosevelt frankly stated that he was not enthusiastic about any arbitrary ceiling on wages—15 per cent above those prevailing in January, 1941. However, he considered the Little Steel formula the best brake on wage inflation so far proposed.

Instead, the President suggested that war workers would be much better off, and that the present wage stalemate between labor unions and the WLB could be broken, if workmen agreed to accept non-negotiable bonds, payable after the war, in lieu of wage increases.

Swiss Minister Charles Bruggmann, brother-in-law of Henry Wallace, is probably the only man in the United States who has recently passed through Germany.

He not only visited Germany, but also France and Spain. In France he found the people downcast and downhearted. German soldiers on the streets of Paris went out of their way to be polite to the French people, even got off the sidewalks if necessary in deference to a Frenchman.

Many Tax Laws Suggested To Get 'Nervous Dollars'

Compulsory Savings, Personal Excess Income Tax, Spending Levy Found Unpopular or Unwieldy; Orthodox Bill Seen.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

As far back as biblical days, the tax collector was an unpopular person.

Today you don't see the tax collector but you know who writes the tax laws and the folks who do (congress) lead a most unhappy life, especially in an election year such as we are approaching.

The complicated problem they face can be simply stated—think it over and figure out what you would do if you had to write a tax law. The problem is this: how to collect the most dollars and lose the least votes.

Soak the rich? Well, they have the money and it burts them the least, but unfortunately there are not enough of them to soak. It is too bad because they are so few in number that their votes don't matter so much. (Only 46,949 people or approximately one eight-hundredth of those with incomes earn over $10,000 a year.)

Tax the rest? That will bring in the biggest total but they are the ones with the votes.

The President says we need 106 billion dollars to run the war this year. The treasury says that out of every dollar collected, 90 cents goes to pay the war bills.

So there have been a number of schemes concocted which are aimed at getting the nervous dollars, the ones most likely to create inflation. Presumably they are the dollars that belong to the people who are now getting a lot more money than they did before the war. It would be just to take the "excess profits" to pay for the war especially because the people who are getting a lot more than they are used to are the ones who spend most freely.

So compulsory savings has been suggested. That is, making Uncle Sam collect a part of everybody's income, which would be returned after the war. Then there is a scheme to tax spending. In other words, tax the dollars which are spent on extras, dollars that get back into circulation and push up the inflation spiral. Not the dollars that go into homes or life insurance or paying old debts, but the dollars that romp off for more clothes than you need to wear, more food and drink than you need to absorb, more gadgets than you ought to get along with in wartime.

Then there is another tax—the personal excess income tax.

That is a tax on the amount of money that you are receiving now that you weren't receiving before the war.

Lacking Popularity

None of these methods is popular. There is a sentimental objection to compulsory savings. It smacks, according to its opponents, too much of totalitarianism, of an interference with the individual's personal habits. The President is opposed to it—and his wife agrees with him—the treasury is opposed to it.

The spending tax is said to be too complicated and likewise appears to be unpopular with the treasury.

Then there is this personal excess income tax of which you will soon be hearing more. The chief objection to that tax seems to be that it is too hard to work out; that it is too bard to make it just and fair. Even the Nazis who tried it gave it up after about a year's trial.

When the personal excess income tax comes up, you will hear many arguments against it. Like many of these other "unorthodox" methods, it requires the establishment of what is called a "base period" to establish a comparison. That is, some period of tima during which the amount earned by the individual is taken as a base. Then what he is making now is compared with that "base" and the difference taxed. But that is a pretty hard thing to work out because so many adjustments would have to be made for special cases that the government would never be able to examine each case and pass on it fairly.

Take the young doctor. The year before the war, he may have been graduated from medical school. Probably he had little or no income then. Then he begins to practice and in wartime, doctors are in demand. He may have made a fair income this year. Would it be fair to tax the "excess" if it were the difference between this year's earning and the "base period" when he was earning nothing at all?

Too Many Inequities

Then there are many men who are getting more money now because they work longer bours or bave received just and deserved promotions—all these things immediately come into the picture when you begin to straighten out the inequities, when you really try to tax a just percentage of a man's income.

And so the predictions which are being made in Washington now are that the next tax bill will be a pretty "orthodox" affair, it will simply have about the same kind of exemptions, a little higher percentage tax, and will be rusbed through at the last minute after as many members of congress have objected to the clauses which they think will be unpopular with their constituents. The government needs the money and needs it quickly. The people don't want to be taxed any more than can be helped and the congressmen will lean over backwards trying to please the people.

Meanwhile, the treasury tells us that most of the money which is being earned due to the great increase in production caused by the war is going to people whose incomes are less than $5,000 a year—seven-eighths of it. So at least seven-eighths of the taxes ought to come from that group.

BRIEFS . . . by Baukhage

An honorable discharge from the army during the present war will be signified by a lapel button, the war department has announced.

The British radio in a French-language youth hour broadcast to the continent declared: "Young men, gain time. If you avoid going to Germany today, perhaps you will never have to go."

The Nazi ministry of propaganda has ordered all literature about Benito Mussolini withdrawn from German libraries and bookshops especially those drawing a parallel between him and Adolf Hitler, the Russian Tass news agency said in quoting a report from Berlin reaching Geneva. The parallel did exceedingly little to help the cause of Hitler in his countrymen's eyes.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

It did have a bearing on rubber use—the close to 24 billion gallons of gasoline used by highway vehicles in 1941. California led the states with a mark on the edge of 2 billion gallons. These are numbers for the "A" card holder to conjure with.

Tires for our fighting aircraft consume from 35 to 95 pounds of rubber, depending on the size of the plane. Inner tubes take from 24 to 54½ pounds.

At a rubber plantation in Haiti, a 75-foot tree was pulled to the ground by the weight of cryptostegia vines which had fought one another to climb it.

A LETTER FROM AFRICA

The following letter was received by Mrs. Tom Percival from her son, Captain C. L. Baker who is stationed somewhere in Africa:

July 21 ,1943

Dear Mother and All:

I hope my letters are beginning to come to you a bit faster than they did. Yours are beginning to reach me more often now. For quite some time it was a long time between letters—its funny how mail, even old mail boosts morale. I've had several letters from the girls recently and tell them I appreciate them very much.

Yesterday I had a few hours leave and went to Tunis. That is quite a modern town, with many modern appartment buildings. It looks prosperous and from what we are told it was very prosperous prior to the war. There are lots of Arabs, and a great many Italians as well as rench. As you probably know it is the capitol of Tunesia, which is a French Protectorale and is ruled by the Bey of Tunis, a native Arab, under French control. I got into the native town which is inside the walls, it's very old with streets about 10 ft. wide and in many areas of the market place it is completely roofed over. Shops are tiny, maybe 10 feet square and in one block are all hat makers, or shoe makers or perfume makers—on top of that the streets are full of all nationalities, all milling around with bicycles and donkeys crowding in here and there. As you may guess the odor is pretty high at all times—We get so we can recognize Arab towns with our eyes closed just by the odor.

We got into a rug shop, it had all kinds an dsizes and they casually mention prices of 30,000 Francs which is $600, just like we say $10. I saw some silk prayer rugs made in Persia, they were about the most beautiful things you ever saw, most were about 6x10 ft. and the prices were $600 up. One Arab in here spoke English and had been to the Philadelphia Exposition in 1926. He told us he sold a large antique rug for $75,000 (you may need a bit of salt with that one.)

We went thru the Beys Palace, an old quide who spoke English took us thru. He had been there 35 years. The present Bey is a new one, a cousin of the old one who was dethroned after the fall of Tunesia because of Pro-German tendencies. The new one lives in a Palace by the sea at Carthage with his Harem and uses this one as an office bldg. This building is over 400 years old, it is built on the same archetectual style as are all Arab buildings. The walls are glazed tile blocks 4 in. square for about ½ way up and were supposed to cost $1.00 each. Above this warm coating are carved plaster plaques about 3x4 ft.—they are beautiful and after 400 years the edges of the carvings are knife edged, no crumbling at all. No two of these plaques are the same design. The ceiling are Mosaic with gold leaf. It's as bright as the day it was put on. I noticed one chandeller that was curved like our metal ones but all in beautiful crystal clear glass. It had been wired for electricity which spoiled it some. The only modern thing was a small lavatory just off the Beys bed-room—it was done in white tile like any of our own. Like all old things they are interesting, but shabby—I'd rather live at home.

We went out to ancient Carthage which is about 15 miles from Tunis. Theer is little lift standing but some old streets with sewers—many cistern are all over the area that the Germans seemed to use for bom shelters. There was the ruins of on old Roman Theater and several early Christian Churches of enormous size. We found one underground pit that looked like it may have been a lions den and in the Roman Circus the French have built a small chapel to two early women marty who as the inscription says "were exposed to the teeth of wild animals."

I believe I mentioned the beautiful Cathedral at Carthage, "Noter Dame du Carthage." The most beautiful building I've ever seen. It far surpasses West Minister Abby. The other day I found they had a museum behind it. There is a small chapel erected to Louis IX of France who led one of the last crusades and he died there and of course the crusade ended there too. In this museum there is a mural of events in the life of LouisIX. It's the most realistic battle scenes I have ever seen. The figures are standing out from the wall so it seems. There are all kinds of relics from painted bottomed wine jugs to tiny tomb stones with the old Phonecian writing on them. It is full of pottery lamps like those mentioned in the Bible. This pottery looks similar to the tile we make drains out of. I saw one set of dishes of this material that were beautiful, very thin and with an extremely fine glaze. They had needles made of ivory, even a tiny back scratcher smaller than this pen with the scratcher shaped like a hand, also ivory dice, in every way resembling those we use today.

I've heard of statues made to represent diseases and used in supplication to the Gods—I saw many of these all about 6 in. high of various materials and so plain I could recognize the disease they were made to represent. One was an enormous cyst on the side of the neck and another was a far advanced dropsy.

Yesterday at officers mess in Tunis we ran into a Pilot, Bombarder and Navigator who had been on that raid that bombed Rome yesterday. It was quite interesting to hear them tell their experiences—all three seemed very young. They had been on raids over Germany and told us some of those stories too.

At the moment one-half of this battalion is in Bivonac and resting but two batteries are on active duty. Those of us that are loafing are certainly lazy. In this heat you don't get very active. However late in the afternoon it cools down and at night you sleep under at least one blanket—that is a big relief.

I've written quite a book, haven's I? I enjoy trying to describe what I have seen and maybe pass a bit of it on.

I'll close for this time, love to all,

"Bake"

Dr. C. L. Baker.

War Bonds should mean something more to you than just "a good sound investment." Figure it out yourself.

By its fruits ye should judge it...

THE L&N, "The Old Reliable," is about 90 years old. Originally it was to run from Louisville, a town of 40,000 to the Tennessee state line . . . a distance of 140 miles. Now the L&N, covering almost five thousand road miles, connects the great cities of St. Louis and Cincinnati with Atlanta and New Orleans, as well as with Gulf Coast towns and many other intermediate cities in the South.

The L&N has grown from a 3 million dollar capitalization to an investment of 519 million dollars. It has been a major factor in the commercial development of the cities it serves and in the industrial and agricultural growth of its territory. The great coal fields of Kentucky, Tennessee, and Alabama speak eloquently of its constructive efforts.

Long before the nation's present program for agriculture, the L&N successfully fostered and promoted such a program. Tremendous industrial development followed this railroad's solicitation and sympathetic aid.

As one of the South's largest taxpayers, the L&N helps substantially in the maintenance of government and schools. The purchasing power and stable citizenship of its employees plus the company's purchases, make it first rank among Southern business enterprises.

The L&N does not boastfully tell this story . . . it is only informative. While its management has been by men of Southern sympathies, business purposes alone were sufficient to prompt their efforts.

Now what has been the L&N stockholder's reward for his investment . . . for the surplus earnings he plowed back into the property . . . for the risk he takes in providing an essential service that develops that territory, raises wages and living standards and for other great accomplishments? Read the surprising answer!

Since the beginning of this railroad, all the cash dividends paid to the stockholders have amounted to an average of less than five per cent per year.

Here is the record for the past 30 years:

Paid for labor	$1,499,769,616
Paid for taxes	218,263,609
Paid for cash dividends	171,568,733

The stockholders received less than the public (in taxes) and about one-eighth of what Labor received.

If the misinformed refer to the railroad company, or its investors of capital, as exploiters of the community or as oppressors of Labor, should not the facts and accomplishments of the L&N put these men to shame? By its fruits ye should judge it.

When the big job of transportation for this ghastly war has been finished, "The Old Reliable" wants to step right in with modern, friendly service for its patrons, its prime purpose being the further development of the South.

Canning Powders Not Recommended

That powder preservatives should not be used in home canning is the warning received at the Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics from Washington. In a recent statement, the commissioner of the Federal Food and Drug Administration said that the use of some of the canning powders is a definite health hazard. "Practically all the substances proposed in the past as chemical preservations have limited value as such, and in view of the known harmful effects of some of them, and the doubtful safety of others, they should not be used as substitutes for the more efficacious and safer processes of sterilization by heat," said the commissioner.

Food specialists at the college recommend the hot water bath method, or the pressure cooker, for all non-acid vegetables. A free leaflet of directions, "Can Fruits and Vegetables for Victory" is available upon request at offices of county and home agents, or at the college.

Ration Stamps In War Ration Book Three Good Sept. 15

R. E. Brugh, chairman of the Boone County War Price and Rationing Board, today announced that brown ration stamps in War Ration Book Three will be used by consumers to purchase rationed meats, fats, oils and rationed dairy products beginning September 12.

War Ration Book Three, a replacement book containing ration currency to be used as the stamps in current ration books run out, was distributed earlier in the summer by mail.

The validity dates for the new brown stamps are as follows

A (16 points) Sept. 12 thorugh Oct. 2; B (16 points) Sept. 19 through Oct. 2; C (16 points) Sept. 26 through Oct. 30; D (16 points) Oct. 3 through Oct. 30; E (16 points) Oct. 10 through Oct. 30; F (16 points) Oct. 17 through Oct. 30.

The last three red stamps in Book Two also remain valid through October 2. Red stamp X became good on August 22, stamp Y is valid August 29, and stamp Z on September 5.

As in the past, stamps will become valid on successive Sundays, but hereafter, they will always expire on Saturday nearest the end of a month. This will give consumers and the trade the advantage of knowing the day of the week on which the meats-fats stamps will always expire, and will permit them to plan accordingly.

Between September 12 when the first series of brown stamps becomes valid and October 2 when the final sets of red stamps expire, both red and brown stamps will be used for purchases. After October 2, only the brown stamps in War Ration Book Three will be used for purchases of meats, fats and rationed dairy products.

The brown stamps in War Book Three are similar in size and have the same point value as the familiar red stamps of War Book Two.

R. E. Brugh also reminded any persons who have not received Book Three and who have not already applied since Aug. 1, that they may still apply at the local board. Members of the armed services who used stamps should obtain an application from the commanding officer, fill it out and mail to OPA Mailing Center, Chicago, Ill., before August 31.

Christmas Gifts For Army & Navy Personnel Overseas Should Be Mailed Between Sept. 15--Oct. 15

The Christmas shopping season is here—even though the weather is still warm.

Mailing of gifts for Army and Navy personnel overseas must begin by September 15, if many of the men and women in our armed services are not to be disappointed; and September 15 is less than a month away.

Christmas gifts may be mailed to parcel post to Army men and women overseas only between September 15 and October 15. After the latter date, such parcels may not be mailed unless a written request from the soldier for the article is presented with each parcel. No soldier should have to ASK for a Christmas gift; so gifts must be mailed on time. The Navy also urges that gifts be mailed between September 15 and October 15.

Reasons for the early mailing dates are: The vast distances that the parcels must travel to reach our men at war fronts and stations the world over; frequent transfers of thousands of men from one location to another, which means forwarding of the mail and consumes additional time; the necessity for giving preference to reinforcements, arms, munitions, medicine and food in allotment of shipping space, which oftens means that the shipments of gifts must wait. And it is most urgent that gifts be delivered to the men IN TIME FOR CHRISTMAS, to keep their spirit high.

The only way to insure against disappointment for the fighting men is to buy at once and mail early—mail your gifts as soon as possible after the September 15 starting date.

Those who have relatives or friends in the service should remember that we have fighting men in Alaska, Greenland, England, Sicily, far-separated regions of Africa, the Near Eastern countries, Australia, many of the South Pacific islands, India, China, South America, and other areas.

Weeks are required for a ship to reach many of these stations. There can be no assurance, of course, that the first ship sailing for any of these locations will have space available to carry Christmas parcels. Gifts may have to wait until vitally needed supplies and equipment have been shipped, to assure victory and to save the lives of our men. If the parcels are not mailed early, that delay may prove to be just enough to prevent their arrival by Christmas day, with consequent disappointment to the men who are offering their lives for their country and ours.

Mail of all kinds is vital to the spirit of fighting men. Every officer who has inspected our Army and Navy postal facilities overseas has reported that thousands of fighting men disregard mess call when it conflicts with mail call, and get their letters first. Officers at our large military and naval stations report that the spirit and efficiency of their men receive a distinct lift when mail is distributed, and that a delay in mail service caused a

Local Women Help With Farm Labor

Mrs. Walter King of Verona and her daughter Mildred were mentioned by Miss Myrtle Weldon, State Leader of Home Demonstration Agents, and State Chairman of the Woman's Farm Labor Program and Woman's Land Army, in a broadcast over WHAS, Louisville, last Saturday, August 28th.

Miss Weldon was reporting on the contribution of farm women to the labor program during this summer. She spoke of the value of the Women's Land Army, and gave as the purpose of this movement the following points: opportunity to recognize the farm women for what they are doing in the war effort; to secure a record of this work; to make the official uniform which is purposely designed and constructed for farm work available to farm women; and to dignify farm labor which has in times past been frowned upon as an activity for women.

To qualify for WLA membership a women must spend at least 30 days, or the equivalent in hours, during this year doing farm labor. Many women are eligible for membership in the Woman's Land Army but have not seen reason to enlist and make a record of the work they do. Mrs. Walter King of Verona is not a member of the WLA, but as far as time and work is concerned she is qualified. Miss Weldon cited Mrs. King for her contribution to farm labor stating that although Mrs. King was not raised on a farm she had not hesitated to do the work that was necessary during the labor shortage. Mrs. King and Mildred work from six to eight hours a day during busy seasons of the year and assisted with the hay harvest, the tobacco crop, the dairy, and miscellaneous activities. She has done her own homemaking jobs, and has been active in community activities. She is a local 4-H Club leader.

At the same time that this record was sumitted by Mrs. Mary Scott Moore, Home Demonstration Agent, the record of Mrs. Vernon Pope at Burlington was also submitted. Both of these women have done their bit to relieve the labor shortage on their own farms. The agent is anxious to have records of other work which has been done.

Precinct Quotas Set For Third War Loan Drive

The precinct quotas for the Third War Loan Drive starting September 9th to raise $732,900.00 in Boone County, according to the assessed value of property in each precinct are as follows:

Beaver	$ 28,256.36
Belleview	28,887.80
Bullittsville & Hebron	65,185.94
Burlington	100,383.19

Petersburg	40,263.59
Union	59,465.38
Verona	36,161.15
Walton	117,547.90

The precinct Chairmen and some of the workers met at the Court House in Burlington Tuesday night to discdss plans for the drive and to receive literature.

This is the largest financial undertaking ever attempted in Boone County and it will take the unlimited efforts of every one to reach this quota.

Do not wait for these workers to call on you as they have a big job on their hands. It is your patriotic duty to volunteer your services to help raise this quota. You may not be able to fight but you can work in this drive.

You are not being asked to give anything. You are asked to lend your money to your government at a good rate of interest.

Our soldiers are risking their lives at a small monthly pay while we at home are taking no risk and going ahead with our private affairs, with more income from high prices than has happened in 20 years. Think about this.

See Here, Private Hargrove!

by Marion Hargrove

WNU SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: Private Marion Hargrove, former feature editor of a North Carolina newspaper, has been inducted into the army and has spent some time in training at Fort Bragg. In his story he has given prospective inductees considerable advice. Immediately before induction he advocates a period of "painting the town red." Once in, the new soldier should "keep an open mind" about what he learns because "the first three weeks are hardest." Private Hargrove has been missing the point of some of his essential training and as a result he has had considerable KP duty. Some of his friends have been advanced to Corporal and his Sergeant has asked why he was not promoted.

CHAPTER V

"Me?" The idea had never occurred to me. "I'm just not the executive type, I suppose. Back at the News, the boss told me that if I stayed there sixty years, I'd never get promoted. I'm just not the type that gets promoted."

"Let's look at the record," said the sergeant. He pulled his little black notebook from his pocket.

"On the drill field Saturday morning, you pulled forty-eight boners out of fifty marching commands. Everything you did was backwards.

"Friday morning you fell out for reveille without your leggins. Saturday you had your leggins but no field hat. Monday morning neither of your shoes was tied and none of your shirt buttons were buttoned. Tuesday morning it was without leggins again."

"A mess sergeant, according to military legend, is a cook whose brains have been baked out."

"I'm never really awake," I protested, "until ten o'clock."

"You ain't awake then," he scoffed. "Every Monday morning without fail I have to wake you up at least a dozen times. I have to walk behind all the posts around here to see which one you're sleeping against. You snore and disturb your classes, too!"

He was exaggerating there, I told him, I don't snore. And I'm sleepy only on Monday morning. The rest of the time I'm alert and energetic.

"You're too energetic sometimes!" he roared. "Just this morning, when the lieutenant was coaching the platoon in rifle sighting and you were on fatigue duty as usual! That was a pretty one! You ran up and down the battery street twenty-two times in thirty minutes and you saluted the lieutenant every time you passed him! Do you think he ain't got a thing to do but return your salutes all morning?"

This was evidently a rhetorical question, so I didn't answer it.

"You don't salute an officer every time you see him when you're right there at his side practically all day. You salute him the first time you see him and the last time you're going to see him.

"And then when the lieutenant explains that to you," he sighed, "then what do you do! The next time you see him, you salute him again and then ask him was you supposed to salute him that time!"

He put his head in his hands and drummed sadly on the toe of his foot locker. He raised his head after a time and looked into the notebook again.

I knew what was coming next and I edged toward the door.

"And then you low-rated the mess sergeant's recipe for creamed beef on toast and told him his chow was the worst in the Army. And you said you was going to start eating in the next battery. That hurt his feelings so bad that he burned the potatoes for the next three meals!"

I promised to apologize to the mess sergeant. The sergeant read out of his notebook for five or six minutes more, enumerating the things I had consistently done wrong.

"Now, do you know," he asked wearily, "why you don't get the red stripes when they give them out?"

"I suppose I'm just not the executive type," I told him.

A mess sergeant, according to military legend, is a cook whose brains have been baked out. This does not apply to the mess sergeant in our battery, whose feelings are easily hurt by cruel remarks and who weeps tears into the mashed potatoes when he's picked on. This is simply the old Army definition of a mess sergeant.

All of us rising student cooks are eligible to become mess sergeants, first Sergeant Adams told us in our first cooking class yesterday morning. Then we can sit out in the cool dining rooms and yell back orders for the cooks to yell at the student cooks to yell at the kaypees.

This is not the beautiful goldbricking life that it seems, though. The mess sergeant has to make requisitions and keep records on all the rations, he has to make out the menus, see that the food is prepared properly and supervise the work of the cooks, the student cooks, and the kaypees. Besides this, he must listen to all the gripes about his food and to the threadbare jokes about cooks who get drunk from lemon and vanilla extract.

All this he must do, with his brains baked out.

The cook, lucky little rascal that he is, also leads an ideal life. He is allowed to believe that he knows more about cooking then the mess sergeant will ever know, although he is not supposed to tell the mess sergeant that he does. He works one day and sleeps the next two.

If the cook is not feeling cheerful, he can pick on at least one student cook and at least five kaypees. On the battlefield, he is in the safest position behind the lines, since the food is endowed with more sentimental value than the top sergeant. The jokes about Army cooks being shot at from both sides are not based upon fact.

However, friend cook has to greet the morn before the morn gets there. On the days when he works, he has to get up between 3:00 and 3:30 o'clock in order to prepare a substantial breakfast for about two hundred healthy, growing boys whose appetites are exceeded only by the size of their mouths and the power of their lungs.

Yesterday we started to school, with cookbooks and manuals and loose-leaf notebooks for our homework. The only way in which it differed from public schools was that the naughty boys didn't have to go and sit with the girls. Also, the dunce seat, instead of being in the corner of the classroom, was said to be behind a large sack of potatoes in the battery kitchen.

The only hope for an easy time in class was gone in this school. There's no percentage in bringing a shiny red apple to a teacher who has the key to at least one well-stocked pantry.

In the kitchen, they tell us, all the cleaning-up work is to be done by the kaypees, so that the cook may be doing more important things. This, unfortunately, doesn't apply to the daily task of cleaning the stoves thoroughly. The stoves, it says here in the books, are the cook's tools and he must do his own grinding.

It isn't worth the time to wait for the stoves to get comfortably cool before you begin the twilight beautification of these overgrown infernos. In order to avoid the rush at the theater, and to let the kaypees off early, start work now.

The stoves must be cleaned inside and out—thoroughly. First, shake down the fire. All the live coals must go into the ashpan under the grate. That much is simple. Then remove the ashpan, red coals and all. It must be dumped into the ash can out on the garbage rack. This entire procedure should be simple, too, it says here. All you have to do is catch the front handle with a heavy glove and catch the little hook in the rear with the far end of your cap lifter. Here we go!

Carry the ashpan well in front of you. Ain't it hot! When you get to the door, simply open it with the toe of your shoe. Like this. Like—Doesn't seem to work. Try again. Try pushing the right screen so that the left one will swing slightly toward you. Ready? Slightly push the right screen. Something seems to be wrong here.

During this time, you will become increasingly aware that the glove over the ashpan handle is becoming hotter and hotter. Just as you get your toe into the door, the heat penetrates the glove and you decide—very suddenly—that perhaps it's best to drop the whole matter.

Drop it slowly, carefully, tenderly—if you can. Do not drop it upon the wooden floor. Look around, if you think you have time, and locate an overturned boiler on which to set it. Whew, that hand's hot! No boiler? Then drop it anyway!

You will find that dropping the ashpan, even though you did it gently, has released a small amount of floating ash, all of which will be absorbed into your mouth and nose, Patience, brother. See that the ashpan isn't lying where it will burn anything, such as a perfectly good wooden floor. Pour cold water on the glove, wait for the resulting steam to blow away, prop open the door as you should have done in the first place, and try, try again.

This time you will almost reach the garbage rack before the glove again gets hot. Slide, Kelly, slide! You won't get there without dropping the whole pan into the clean road, but at least you tried.

Beat the pan against the ash can several times for sound effect. Return to the kitchen, where the mess sergeant, who was watching you through the window all the time, will direct you to return and clean it up.

By the time you have finished and look about you, the kaypees have finished their work and are sitting around gaping at you as if you were a steam shovel. A very, very black steam shovel.

Isn't gas a wonderful fuel?

Private Sher and I were sitting out on the back steps to dodge the cleaning work going on inside when we saw the sergeant bearing down on us from the other end of the battery street.

"It's no use scooting inside, Hargrove," said Sher. "He's already seen us. Look tired, as if you'd already done your part of the work." Private Sher is the goldbricking champion of Battery A and always knows what to do in such an emergency.

We both draped expressions of fatigue over our faces and the sergeant skidded to a halt before us. He reached into his hip pocket for the little black book and aimed a finger at both of us.

"Bums!" he shouted. "Bums! I worked my fingers to the bone yesterday morning getting this platoon to pretty up the barracks for inspection. Comes inspection and two privates have dirty shoes lying sprawled all over the floor under their bunks! Private Hargrove and MISTER Private Sher! Report to Corporal Farmer in fatigue clothes."

We reported to Corporal Farmer, who looked at his list of jobs. "As much as you don't deserve it," he said, "you two goldbricks are in line for canteen police."

Mr. Private Sher and I walked up the battery street toward the canteen.

"Is this canteen police business good or bad?" I asked.

"Oh, so-so," he said. "You have to clean up the papers and cigarette butts around the post exchange first thing in the morning. Then you come around and check up three or four times during the day."

I stopped, aghast. "What do you do between times?"

"Just be inconspicious," said Sher. "That's all there is to it. Please pick up that candy wrapper over there. My back aches."

We cleaned up the grounds around the post exchange and sat for a while in the shade, watching a battery going through calisthenics. With beautiful precision, the soldiers swung their rifles up, down, to the right, to the left. They went through the quarter, half, and full knee bends and the shoulder exercises and the rest of the routine.

"Those boys seem to be improving, Mr. Sher," I said.

"Result of hard work," said Maury. "Personally, I get awfully tired watching this. We'll wear ourselves out. Let's go over to my kitchen and handshake for a bottle of milk."

"No," I protested. "We must go to my kitchen."

"To avoid a tiring argument," suggested Private Sher, "we will go to both our kitchens. We can't be thrown out of both of them."

After successful forays on both kitchens, Private Sher began to yawn with boredom. "My dear Hargrove," he said, "we must stimulate our minds. Let us adjourn to my place for a game of checkers." Private Sher's "place" was only one flight of stairs removed from my squadroom, so we adjourned.

"He's already seen us. Look tired as if you'd already done your part of the work."

After two games of checkers, Private Sher waved his arms. "This is folderol," he said. "You are no checker player, Hargrove. You have no idea of tactics. Let us sit by the window and watch our comrades drill. There is something stirring in the sight of fine young men perfectly executing a marching order."

While we were sitting there being stirred, another corporal disturbed us. He wanted us to go with him to haul coal.

"Much as we would like to help you haul coal, my good man," said Maury, "we are now actively engaged in the work of policing up the post exchange. Feel free to call upon us at any other time."

The corporal placed his hands on his hips and stared at us. "You're being punished," he asked, "with canteen duty?"

"There's no need to be vulgar," said Sher. "If you will excuse us, it is time for us to go again to look for cigarette butts around the post exchange. Coming Mr. Hargrove?"

"Coming, Mr. Sher. And a good day to you, corporal!"

ISRAEL CALLED TO BE A HOLY PEOPLE

LESSON TEXT—Leviticus 19:1-4, 11-18, 32-34.

GOLDEN TEXT—Be ye holy; for I am holy.—I Peter 1:16.

Labor Day, 1943, with a war-torn world, finds us facing a social order deeply divided regarding the rights and wrongs of the relationship between man and man, especially capital and labor.

For these many years we have talked of a planned economy where kindness and justice shall control all dealings of man with his fellow man. But to accomplish such a result apart from the hand of God to guide and restrain, has proved to be impossible.

Selfishness and sin control too much of the thought and action of our world. We need to be reminded, as was Israel in our lesson, that God has called us to be a holy people. His holiness is not just something of which one sings in a hymn or talks in a sermon. It means among other things, real social justice.

God has always stood for social righteousness. The underlying moral law of the universe demands it, and the law of God as revealed to His people developed and implemented it for successful functioning, were we only wise enough to see and follow it.

It is time that all God's people emphasize God's moral principles in the life of society. Never forgetting that its first business is to preach the redeeming gospel of Christ, the church ought also to make its influence felt for social righteousness.

Our lesson speaks first of the foundational matter in all social justice, namely:

I. Holiness of Heart Before God (Lev. 19:1-4).

Because God is holy, His people were to be holy. It was not a matter of choice or impulse. They belonged to a holy God, they were to be a holy people.

There is an idea current in the church today which has served Satan well, namely, that holiness of life is something which is not required; that it is expected only of a few folk who are spiritually minded, and that the other professed followers of Christ may go on living a worldly, careless, powerless life. It is the devil's own lie. God expects every Christian to be holy.

Such rightness with God shows itself in a rightness with others, which we note as our second point:

II. Holiness of Life Before Men (Lev. 19:11-18, 32-34).

How intensely practical and workable in daily experience were the laws here given to Israel. They are just as apropos to our present day.

1. Honesty (vv. 11-13). No stealing, no perjury, no lying, no oppression, no withholding of wages, none of these could be tolerated, for they dishonored God's name. Think what the elimination of dishonesty in dealing between men would accomplish. Most of our social problems would be solved overnight. Merchants would do well to read verses 35 and 36 in this connection.

2. Kindness (v. 14). The deaf cannot hear what we say about them, nor can the blind see what we do. But the eternal God hears and sees, and He expects us to be kind to them.

3. Fairness (vv. 15, 16). Some assume that a man must be right because he is rich. Others are equally sure that the poor are always worthy of special consideration.

Note the condemnation of the talebearer. Every gossip who reads these words knows that God condemns that evil practice. Nor does He countenance indifference to the welfare of others. Their blood cries out to Him for deliverance (v. 16).

4. Love (vv. 17, 18). "Love thy neighbor as thyself." That is the standard. How much have we done to meet it?

A rebuke may be necessary, but love will not permit grudges, or the seeking of vengeance, even when we have been wronged.

5. Respect (vv. 3, 32). God's Word always stresses the need of a right attitude toward parents. Children need to learn anew the lesson of verse 3.

Then there are the aged (v. 32). Old age pensions doubtless have their place in our complex social order, but perhaps they would not be needed if men and women honored the hoary head and the face of an old man.

A pension does not take the place of honor and love for the aged, even though it may pay the bills. God has high standards.

6. Consideration (vv. 33, 34). The man who knows God will not be party to taking advantage of a stranger. He remembers that he too has been a stranger. To meet with loving kindness and tender care when one is in a strange place should inspire one to go and do likewise.

New Back-to-School Fashions Tell a Most Interesting Story

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

TO APPROACH the back-to-school clothes problem wisely and patriotically during this season of wartime economy, is to plan in terms of sterling-worth apparel that not only makes "looks" its appeal, but definitely underwrites a future of service. The sentiment this fall is to get an early start in making suit and coat selections of dependable wool weaves and other quality materials that will carry on faithfully during the school terms to come.

The back-to-school crowd, from kindergarten tots to seniors ready for their B.A., are due for a big surprise this fall in that a new word has entered into its modern vocabulary that has to do with clothes. That word is "aralac," and one might as well become acquainted with it, at the dawn of the fall shopping-tour program! This "seventh-wonder" fiber is destined to become as familiar before the season is far spent as are rayon and nylon, silk and wool, cotton and linen.

Aralac, a fashion text book will tell you, is the first American man-made fiber that rivals wool in warmth. A by-product of the dairies, spun from the casein of skim milk after the nourishing fat has been removed, this protein fiber possesses the insulating qualities and resiliency of natural animal fiber. Not only is it used in 100 per cent form for interlining sports and dress coats, winter play suits and particularly children's garments but you will find aralac blended with other fibers in fabrics used for sportswear, dresses, coats and suits.

We show you in the illustration, a group of fashions which will be making their debut among the campus and playground set this fall. See how supple the lines are, how beautifully the fabric drapes and tailors. The college-bound girl to the left has based her selection on aralac blended with other fiber for travel to and from school, for week-end dates, in fact as a background for her whole wardrobe, this collegienne has chosen a suit and matching topcoat in covert, made of aralac blended with wool. The topcoat is interlined with aralac for extra warmth.

The teen-ager to the right knows her fashion lesson too, for she has chosen a blue tweed with double button closing. This smart coat in wool with velvet trimming accent identifies its aralac interlining with a tag of which she is justly proud. Her snappy visor hat carried out the military look.

The girl centered in the group is wearing a basic daytime dress in a new gabardine made of 70 per cent rayon and 30 per cent aralac and you'll find it tailors superbly. This is one of a group of mix-matches made by Wraggé, a foremost creative designer of tailored clothes for women. It is featured in a new color this fall—American buff. Both color and cut allow dressing up or down with jewelry and accessories.

Outstanding in advance style displays are cunning brother-and-sister styles which feature cunning coats in such intriguing colors as rose wool for sister and gold for brother. These have aralac quilted linings and with accents of beaver trim on the little matching bonnets or caps they are as intriguing styles as mothers may ever hope to find for their little ones.

Ostrich in Vogue

The simplicity of the new fall clothes calls for dashing hats that go in for color flattery. In answer to the call milliners are creating the most bewitching headgear of gay ostrich fancy can picture. The outlook is for a big ostrich vogue, not only in hats but neckpieces as well. The hat shown at the top is made entirely of cerise colored ostrich. Long plumes cover the back of the head, falling in portrait fashion to the shoulders. The other chapeau is a tiny cap that flis over the right side of the head and is accented with three small curled ostrich feathers which tone from gold to brown.

Schoolgirls Like Pinafore Jumpers

Registering strongly with the college and schoolgirl groups are youthful dresses, such as a dressy pinafore frock in black moire. The low-cut sweetheart neck is prettied with a pastel lame dickey. Some designers do their pinafores on corduroys and velveteens with heart-shaped bibs edged in Irish crochet. One intriguing model features a sweetheart-neck jumper in red corduroy with green crepe skirt. In the group of guimpe effects, dresses of velvet, black faille and twill are available in different colors. Bow-tie or ruffle-neck blouses are sold with the guimpes. Suspender tops with dirndl skirts of gay crepes are gaily embroidered or have multi-color felt appliques in peasant fashion.

Novel Fabrics, Intriguing Detail in Blouse Styles

Nothing less than a wardrobe of smart blouses will suffice to carry out the demands of fashion during the coming months. There's no-end excitement ahead when it comes to the fall and winter blouse style parade. To begin at the beginning of the fascinating story blouses have to tell, there are the classic shirts to wear in office, in classroom and all through the active on-duty hours of the day. The news item in this connection are the shirts made of bizarre prints.

There is much to say also in regard to bow-tie blouses. Just one blouse after another ties either with a tailored bow of self fabric at the throat or with a huge fluttery butterfly bow. Vastly flattering are the new-so-fashionable bow blouses.

Noisy Gliders

Noise within a closed glider traveling at 150 miles an hour is nearly as loud as that within a plane with engines, owing to the violent agitation of the air as it sweeps over the wings and about the fuselage, says Collier's. This noise, in many instances, has reached a level of 115 decibels, or higher than that in a boiler factory.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Rubber shortage will cause motor trucks to be operated this year only 60 per cent of their 1941 mileages, according to OWI. Ton mileage haul in intercity service, however, was up 10 per cent early this year.

Rubber latex, a milk-like substance, contains from 30 to 40 per cent solids; cow's milk has only 12 per cent solids.

Add lettuce to the list of rubber producers! Tests of three varieties of lettuce by the University of California, it has been reported, showed high content of rubber latex.

CHATTERER HAS HIS LAUGH

SAMMY JAY had not been up to the Old Orchard for several days, and Chatterer the Red Squirrel was beginning to wonder if Sammy had grown tired of corn. But Chatterer had learned that it always is best to be prepared; so, every morning when he visited Farmer Brown's cornerib he brought a generous supply back to the Old Orchard and hid it in several secret places in different parts of the old stone wall and some in a certain hollow in an old apple tree. Chatterer couldn't quite believe that Sammy had given up all hope of making him more trouble, so he meant to be prepared.

So when Sammy did appear early one morning Chatterer was not in the least surprised.

Now, when Sammy first made Chatterer promise to get corn for him whenever he wanted it, Sammy had thought only of the easy way it would be to get all the corn he wanted without working for it. Afterward, he had thought more of the fun of seeing Chatterer in trouble getting it; so, when Chatterer had at last found a way of always having the corn ready without running any risk at all, Sammy had spent all his spare time trying to think of some way to upset Chatterer's simple plan. He had noticed that Chatterer always got the corn for him

"I believe I will," replied Sammy, also pretending to be very polite.

from a certain hiding place under the stones of the old wall. All in a flash a plan had popped into his head—a plan to give Chatterer such a fright that he would not dare visit that hiding place again in a hurry.

"Good morning, Sammy Jay," said Chatterer, pretending to be polite. "I had begun to think that you were tired of corn. I have some very nice corn ready for you. Will you have some this morning?"

"I believe I will," replied Sammy, also pretending to be very polite. "It is very nice of you to pick out the best corn for me, and the very thought of it makes me hungry. I believe I would like some this very minute."

As he spoke he turned his head too hide a grin, for, thought he, "of course, Chatterer will go straight to that hiding place in the Old Stone Wall and then we shall see some fun." He glanced hastily in that direction and he saw a patch of red half hidden behind the wall, and he knew that it was the red coat of Reddy Fox. Reddy was hiding just where Sammy had told him to.

Now, Chatterer had been doing some quick thinking. He remembered the sharp tricks Sammy had played on him before, and he didn't have the least doubt that Sammy had planned another. "Of course, he expects me to go straight to that place where he knows I have hidden corn for him, and, if he has planned any trouble for me, that is where it will be," thought Chatterer. "I think I'll get the corn from one of the hiding places he doesn't know about."

With that Chatterer ran swiftly out along the branch of the tree he was in, leaped across to another tree, and then to a third, the one in which was the hollow in which he had put some of the corn. In a few minutes he was back, with his cheeks stuffed full. Sammy Jay pretended to be very much pleased, but he ate it as if he had lost his appetite, as, indeed, he had. You see, he was wondering what he should say to Reddy Fox, to whom he had promised a chance to catch Chatterer. He knew that Reddy would think that it was all one of Sammy's tricks. So, without waiting to finish all the corn, Sammy politely said good-by and flew away to the deepest part of the Green Forest.

'Ha, ha, ha! Ho, ho, ho!" laughed Chatterer, as his sharp eyes spied Reddy Fox trying to creep away without being seen. "Ha, ha, ha! Ho, ho, ho! It's my turn to laugh. Ha, ha, ha! Ho, ho, ho!"

OLD ARMY GAME

Then there was the general who looked like he was going to explode. He was so mad he wouldn't even talk to himself. He received a letter marked "Private."

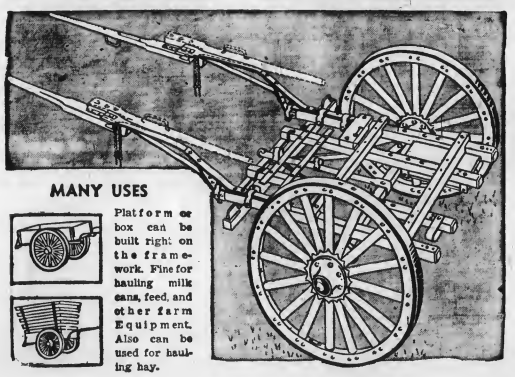
From where I sit...
by Joe Marsh

Charlie Jenkins writes me from down at camp:

"Dear Joe: Somethin' mighty swell happened to me on my last day's leave. I'm standin' on the corner, not knowin' anybody in town, when a stranger says 'hello, soldier—how'd you like a chicken dinner at home with me and the wife?'

"Well, it turns out they were the kind of folks who couldn't do enough to help out soldiers. They'd invited two other fellows and just as soon as we're introduced the lady brings us a glass of beer before dinner.

"We had a fine dinner, talked till ten... Honest, Joe, I'll never forget their hospitality. Makes me feel good fighting for people like that."



Thought you might like to hear what kind o' fellows we got in this army of ours, and how they like to enjoy themselves when they get a chance to.

LOYALTY

ON your vacation and business trips in the past—as well as at your neighborhood Service Station—you have been served often by loyal men in the Standard Oil uniform. They were loyal to you—they were loyal to us.

It was only natural that men in whom the quality of loyalty was inbred and cherished should respond in large numbers to the call of their country. Hundreds of these stanch and faithful men have exchanged their old Service uniforms for the new uniform of greater service to Uncle Sam.

Someday they will be coming back, their new job finished. You will find them still loyal to you when they return and change their uniforms again.

In the meantime other loyal men, who have been at their home posts, are upholding this service tradition under difficult and sometimes trying conditions.

Loyalty is that personal trait in individuals which makes a Company great—and wins wars.

CAN YOU ANSWER THESE QUESTIONS ABOUT FOOD PRESERVATION?

Should bananas be stored in refrigerator?
No. They keep better at room temperature.

Should eggs be washed before storing in refrigerator?
No. It removes a natural protective coating that helps retain moisture and vitamins. Eggs should be stored in covered container.

What is best way to store steaks, roasts and other kinds of fresh meat?
Wipe with clean dry cloth but do not wash until ready to use. Place in meat keeper if you have one. If not, cover loosely with waxed paper (do not wrap tightly) and place in or directly beneath defrosting tray. Meat to be kept for a relatively long period should be wrapped in waxed paper and frozen.

How should ground fresh meat be stored?
It should be wrapped loosely in waxed paper and frozen if not to be used day of purchase, as it spoils quicker than solid cuts.

When should refrigerator dishes and similar covered containers be used?
Leftovers, all liquids and all foods subject to drying out or absorbing odors from other foods should be kept in covered containers. Leaving liquids and moist foods uncovered speeds formation of frost on freezing unit.

Should wrapping paper, bags and cartons be removed from foods before storing?
Yes. Paper acts as an insulator and prevents cold from reaching food. An exception is quick-frozen foods, which should be put in freezer in original containers..

Why should fresh vegetables be placed under refrigeration quickly?
Because they lose vitamins and flavor rapidly when exposed to warm, dry air. Vegetables should be washed, drained and placed in crisper.

How can drying out of cheese be retarded?
By storing it in refrigerator in covered container. Or by spreading a thin coat of butter on cut edge.

What is best way to get full vitamin value from orange juice?
Chill oranges and then squeeze, instead of squeezing first and then chilling the juice. This conserves vitamins.

What is best temperature for main food compartment?
Forty degrees is safest. Higher than 45 degrees is not recommended.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Essential Work Only Deferment Basis; Allied Fliers Pour More Block Busters On Berlin and Italian Defense Targets; Nation Ponders Possible Labor Draft

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

When American troops captured Munda airfield on New Georgia island in the central Solomons after a bitter struggle, they found these Japanese fighter and bomber planes wrecked by the Yanks' heavy aerial bombardment.

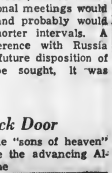
EUROPE:
'Scarred and Burned'

Prime Minister Churchill's vow to "sear, scar and burn" Hitler's European fortress was drawn in sharp focus with the RAF's 700 plane raid on Berlin and the bombardment of Italian communication and industrial centers.

Poised at three different points, Allied armies awaited the command to spill over into Europe. One million men stood in the Near East; another million were concentrated in Sicily and North Africa, and approximately 2½ million were ready for action in England.

But as they waited, Allied bombers poured block-busters on the Axis industries turning out armaments for the enemy forces. Assaults continued on the railroads over which the Axis could rush reinforcements to meet the Allied invasion. And airfields from which Axis armies could rise to challenge the Allies' air cover for the oncoming troops were ripped up.

Hitler First



Concentration on the defeat of Hitler, but consideration of means of speeding up the war in the Pacific, were the principal military topics of the Quebec conference between President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill.

In the political field, plans were laid to return friendly reconquered countries over to the provisional governments in exile. Enemy countries would remain subject to military government.

Declaring that unification was needed to co-ordinate the services of the combined Allied armies, navies and air forces, the conferees said that additional meetings would be necessary, and probably would be called at shorter intervals. A tri-partite conference with Russia concerning the future disposition of Europe will be sought, it was stated.

PACIFIC:
At Japs' Back Door

While the little "sons of heaven" fell back before the advancing Allied armies in the Southwest Pacific, American forces under Vice-Adm. Thomas C. Kinkaid stole through the misty, swirling Aleutian fog to retake Kiska island and plant their battle standards within 600 miles of the northern point of the Japanese empire.

Vice-Admiral Thomas Kinkaid

On this northern point of Paramushiro stands the great military base guarding the back door to Tokyo. Already, American heavy bombers have made two raids on Paramushiro, but since the fogs which shroud the north Pacific assemble here and then move eastward toward the Aleutians, the Japs still possess an advantage in weather.

In the Southwest, Allied troops bore down on Salamaua, New Guinea, as the Japs fell back for a last stand before the town. In the central Solomons, the enemy were penned in their last holding on Kolombangara island.

MANPOWER:
446,000 Dads to Go

To meet the armed services' call for 1,873,000 men during the last half of 1943, it will be necessary to induct about 446,000 fathers, Selective Service Director Lewis B. Hershey declared. Out of every 100 dads, 7 will be drafted, and perhaps 13 rejected.

Lewis B. Hershey

According to Hershey, 738,000 of the 1,566,000 1-A men of record July 1, will be called to the colors before the end of the year. Another 644,000 will be obtained from re-examination of the physically unfit in 4-F and those hitherto deferred because of essential occupation. Exhaustion of this pool will result in the induction of fathers to meet the armed services' goals.

Fathers employed in essential war work may obtain deferment, Hershey said, particularly if they are employed in areas with labor shortages. Of the 1,749,000 exempt because of agricultural activities, none are expected to be called, to prevent interference with food output.

Labor Draft?

Director Hershey's statement followed reports that the government was shaping a national labor draft to meet a need for 2,600,000 new workers for essential industry.

War Manpower Commissioner Paul V. McNutt declared that the WMC would continue to resort to voluntary efforts to obtain the necessary help. Recently, the WMC made essential occupation the sole basis for draft deferment, even for fathers after October 1.

With most of the 18-year-olds scheduled for the services; with many workers loath to switch to war work from non-essential occupations, and with the supply of working women about drained, attention was focused on a labor draft for solution of the manpower problem.

INCOME TAX:
Estimate Returns

Fifteen million taxpayers will be required to file estimates of their 1943 income taxes September 15, but the nation's farmers will have the choice of making their declarations on that date or December 15.

All married men with gross incomes of $3,500 or more, and single persons earning $2,700 or over, must file figures showing how much they owe the government in excess of the 20 per cent being deducted from the wages through the current withholding tax. At the same time, a 50 per cent payment of the estimated excess liability must be made.

If farmers file a return of their estimated tax September 15, they also must make a 50 per cent payment. If they choose to file December 15, they must make full payment.

In the case of the average taxpayer, he will be allowed a 20 per cent error in margin. Farmers are granted a 33 per cent margin. All taxpayers will have to file a final return on their tax liability next March 15, at which time any balances will be settled.

HIGHLIGHTS . . . in the week's news

PRIVATE DEBT: People owe much less than they did two years ago, according to a report by United Business service. At the end of 1941 total consumer debt outstanding, mostly on installment sales, amounted to $9,800,000,000. Now it is about five billion dollars. Higher incomes and restricted opportunities to buy goods have acted to pare down the outstanding debt.

WAR FRAUDS: War frauds are much bigger than in 1917 and '18 in this much bigger war, U. S. Attorney General Francis Biddle commented, in announcing that 123 federal indictments have been obtained, and that 1,279 cases are being investigated. Seventy-one cases have been disposed of, and some kind of penalty has been levied in 90 per cent of these cases, he said.

RUSSIA:
Secks Iron

The coal and iron of the Donetz basin lay before the massed might of the Russian armies as they surged forward on the southern front. In one sector, where the Nazis claimed more than 150,000 Reds were concentrated, their lines were slowly pushed back under the heavy Russian artillery and tank fire, and rolling waves of infantry.

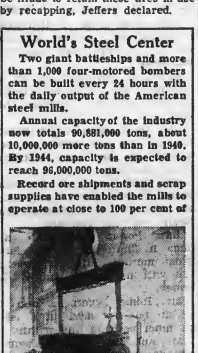
Farther to the north, the Reds pressed westward after retaking the blackened ruin of Kharkov, the great industrial city whose foundries and mills shaped the Donets' iron into steel. Here, the Russians threw out a column that bore down on the big railroad line running into the far southeastern corner of the Donetz basin, where the Nazis were fighting the latest Red break.

As fighting mounted in the south, it was reported that a Finnish labor leader had met a British union representative in Sweden and given him proposals for settling the Russo-Finnish war. These called for respect for traditional Finnish territory and Allied economic assistance.

TIRES:
To Release 17,000,000

Seventeen million automobile tires will be released for essential civilian use in 1943, and plans are being made for the distribution of 30 million more next year, Rubber Director William Jeffers reported.

Distribution of 30 million tires next year, however, will depend upon the War Production board's approval of an expansion in the synthetic rubber manufacturing facilities. Since most of the tires would be synthetic and more time is required for their fabrication, additional equipment will be needed to meet the distribution goal.



Declaring that only holders of "B" and "C" gas ration cards could be expected to obtain new tires, Jeffers said that the rubber on the wheels of America's automobiles remained the greatest assurance for future driving. Every effort should be made to retain these tires in use by recapping, Jeffers declared.

World's Steel Center

Two giant battleships and more than 1,000 four-motored bombers can be built every 24 hours with the daily output of the American steel mills.

Annual capacity of the industry now totals 90,881,000 tons, about 10,000,000 more tons than in 1940. By 1944, capacity is expected to reach 96,000,000 tons.

Record ore shipments and scrap supplies have enabled the mills to operate at close to 100 per cent of capacity. Blast furnaces which melt the ore into metallic iron from which steel then is made, have been increased to handle 64,500,000 tons of raw material annually.

Because it has been previously refined, scrap can be mixed with the molten iron from the blast furnaces for production of steel, thus conserving the need for additional ore and speeding the manufacturing process.

FOOD PRICES:
Blames Middlemen

Charging the existence of an ever-widening gap between prices received by farmers and those paid by consumers, Rep. Hampton P. Fulmer (S. C.) declared "moneymad middlemen making war profits up to 500 per cent" are responsible for shortages and price increases of foodstuffs. Fulmer is leader of the house's farm bloc.

Office of Price Administration figures show that a majority of large wholesalers made at least 100 per cent greater profits in 1942 than in 1939, Fulmer said, while one-fifth of all wholesalers received profits of 500 per cent.

To remedy the alleged profiteering, Fulmer said he would press for establishment of set prices for basic farm commodities, with percentage markups allowed for distributor and retailers.

PAY CHECKS

Longer hours, authorized wage increases, and "upgrading" of workers into higher-paid classifications have combined to keep the pay checks of millions of urban workers climbing faster than living costs so far in 1943; these three factors are having a greater effect in raising the average wage level than most persons realize, and they operate without breaking existing wage-freeze regulations, according to the Northwestern National Life Insurance Co. of Minneapolis.

CHINESE BLACK MARKET

If you think the U. S. Black Market is profitable, take a look at operations in China. A fountain pen costs $10,000 Chinese currency in Chungking. Even with the Chinese dollar worth only five cents this is $500 in U. S. dollars and a lot dough to pay for a fountain pen.

You can also understand why U. S. fliers load up with lipstick before going to China. A lipstick brings $5,000 in Chinese dollars in Chungking. This is about $250 in U. S. currency.

This is also why lend-lease has sent a certain amount of silk stockings, champagne, perfume and other luxuries to Chinese war lords. They are sent to counteract similar imports by the Japanese which have a very undermining influence on a war lord worried over maintenance of his love-nest.

RUBBER DELUGE

Officials in the office of the rubber administrator are beginning to wonder what they can do with the hundreds of thousands of tons of synthetic rubber which will come from the new plants next year. It seems a little late, but they are now facing the elementary question of whether or not the tire companies can handle the vast quantities of synthetic rubber.

The greatest amount of rubber ever processed by the nation's rubber companies in one year was 540,000 tons. But next year we shall have nearly one million tons to deal with. Obviously, the present facilities will be inadequate.

But the problem is aggravated by the fact that tire manufacturing machinery has been knocked down and stored away so that rubber companies could convert to production for the war. Instead of tires, they have been making rubber boats, balloons, tank treads and life rafts.

Thus we have the problem of finding new plant space in which to bring that machinery back into production; and the further problem of creating entirely new productive facilities to take care of the increased quantities of rubber which will be available for manufacture.

SOLOMONS ISLAND

Few maps of the world show the location of Solomons Island, Maryland, a pinprick in Chesapeake bay. Locally it is famous only for its fishing and the fact that the steamships Leviathan, Mount Vernon and Monticello were laid up there to rust in deference to private shipowners.

Since the war, however, Solomons Island has become an important naval installation, and the navy department recently arranged for the shipment of some airplanes to Solomons Island on an aircraft carrier built for the British in a West coast yard. While the carrier was going through the Panama canal locks, London radioed asking its whereabouts.

"We're on our way to Solomons Island," replied the carrier's commanding officer.

"Why are you going to Solomons Island and where is it?" London queried in amazement.

"Get in touch with the embassy in Washington," radioed back the ship's commanding officer.

After some anxious moments, London learned in code that the carrier's commanding officer had not mutinied, nor was he going to the Solomon Islands, but to the U. S. naval base at Solomons Island, Maryland.

SMALL BUSINESS BLOW-UP

The government's program for the relief of small business is headed for trouble when congress reconvenes next month.

At secret sessions of the senate small business committee, headed by Senator James Murray of Montana, small business men complained about their inability to get government loans for war contracts and sub-contracts, while billions of dollars of government money is being shelled out to big corporations.

The senate committee heard complaints about the tight-fisted loan policies of the Smaller War Plants corporation.

One example given the senate committee was that of the Riverside Boatyard company of Miami, which tried to get a loan of only $10,000 from the Smaller War Plants corporation to complete a war contract. After being turned down, the company got the $10,000 loan from a private bank within 24 hours.

As a result, Senator James Murray of Montana, chairman of the senate small business committee, is planning some close scrutiny of the Smaller War Plants corporation.

MERRY-GO-ROUND

Just before Frank Tinsley, former press aide of the British Supply Council, left to join the Royal Canadian Air force, he wrote the Pennsylvania railroad: "As a British subject who has lived in the United States for 14 years, mostly as a newspaper man with Reuters, will you grant me one favor in leaving this grand country? Will you let me ride in a locomotive cab of one of your trains to New York, on my way to Canada?" . . . Tinsley left Washington in the cab.

Peace Planners Emphasize Need for Orderly 'D' Day

Planning Board Report Envisions Reintegration of Men Into Services Where Skill, Ability Are Recognized.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

Next week's release of "Washington Digest" will be written from Quebec, where H. R. Baukhage covered the history-making Roosevelt-Churchill conference for Western Newspaper Union and its affiliated newspapers.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

As the plans which received their final approval at the Quebec conference start turning from ink and paper to moving men and machines, the thoughts of other planners turn toward another zero hour—"D" day.

The war is not over by any means but hard-headed people who realize that you can't wait until it rains to prepare for a rainy day know that you can't wait until the sun comes out to buy your summer clothes.

"D" day is as important as "M" day. Demobilization is as big a problem as mobilization. Various plans have been worked on, none has been perfected. The President has offered one. The Republican party will offer another. Industry will present its program. The administration, whoever is at the helm when peace comes, will have a heavy responsibility. The National Resources Planning board has already made a report expressing its opinions on a plan drawn up by a special committee on post-war readjustment which, at least, gives us a point of departure.

Plan Needed Now

The board points out that victims of the war are already coming back and the time is ripe. Only the other day, I went through Walter Reed hospital here and saw some of those victims. Saw photographs of the conditions in which they come back and others showing what medical skill has done for them. I also saw the workshops where wounded men are being rehabilitated, fitted to take up work which, in spite of their handicaps, they could learn to do.

This plan emphasizes the need for an orderly demobilization. It is important to get every man who can be spared from the armed forces, the moment he can be spared without threatening the nation's security, back into civilian life. I know how glad I was when I got out of uniform into civies after the last war.

But the report emphasizes that still more important than speed is order in demobilization. "We not only want the men out of the armed services; we want to get them into peace services where skills and abilities can be fully recognized, utilized and rewarded." That is the thesis of the planning board.

Responsibility for the placement of veterans in industry is acknowledged by the re-employment division of the selective service system under the selective service act. The selective service system is not perfect but considering the job it had to do, it has worked out in a manner that is a triumph of the democratic method. Draft boards are groups of "neighbors" who pass upon each registrant, and on that basis, select or reject him. The same system will put the soldier back into his old job—if his old job is there, and if he can fill it. But many had no jobs. Others for one reason or another will be unable to fill the ones they had before the war. These cases must be taken care of.

Board's Principles

Business has been shuffled and shifted about just as the men themselves have. It may be difficult to get man and job together. The problem is intricate but the committee has tried to lay down certain principles. Here they are:

1. Three months' furlough at the end of the war at regular base pay not to exceed $100 a month, plus family allowances.

2. Beyond that time, if necessary, unemployment insurance for 26 weeks for those who register with the government employment service.

3. Special aid and counsel regarding readjustment and compensation.

4. Special provision, including tuition and allowance, for the continuation of education interrupted by the war or to follow a special course of training.

5. Veterans credit for old age and survivors' insurance on the basis of service in the armed forces.

6. Opportunities for agricultural employment and settlement for a limited number of well qualified men. But no dumping of men on farms simply because industrial employment is not immediately available.

Re-Training Program

Similar provisions must be made for war workers as war industries close or change over. Meanwhile, the government will maintain centers where assistance and retraining for civilian jobs can be arranged. In order to prevent a too rapid attempt at change-over of industry, a moderate policy of continuation of war contracts some of which can be continued in the national good.

Of course, nothing can be done permanently to stabilize the labor situation without a rapid expansion of peace-time industry toward a goal of full employment. It is well understood even by the most fervent of government planners that private industry and not the government must eventually furnish the employment.

Already industry is offering plans of its own but it cannot be expected to do the whole job. One suggestion is that government loans be made to industries turning to peace-time production in proportion to the number of men such industries employ.

Business cannot take over the burden alone. In 1939, we were at peace although we were making a lot of war supplies for the Allies. Then 4.1 million workers were employed in munitions making. Eight and six-tenths millions were working on farms or agricultural pursuits. At the end of last year, the workers in war plants had more than doubled. They were 10.5 millions. In agriculture, unemployment has not greatly changed, comparatively speaking; farm workers amount to 8.9 millions. But the men in the armed forces more than doubled. In the same period the unemployed had decreased from 8.7 millions to 1 million. (Some of these we shall always have with us—the lame, the halt and, of course, the lazy.) But it is estimated there were 900,000 persons jobless and deserving work in July of this year.

There may be points to the committee's plan to which objections will be raised. It is not offered as a working drawing, merely as a basis of discussion, but how much better such a procedure is than the policy after the last war when the soldier was a football and where each congress tried to vote more dollars out of the treasury without rhyme or reason; money which didn't provide jobs, which in many cases, pitifully failed of its purpose, and in others simply filled the coffers of the bootlegger and the shark and left the recipient nothing.

Diary of a Broadcaster

Over the land, the victory gardens are bringing in their rich yields to many a person who probably never worked as hard—physically—for his supper before. And probably never had more fresh, sweet and luscious vegetables.

But I wandered over a farm recently that was praying for rain. I couldn't help thinking, as I pushed through a wood lot beside a shrunken stream, stained brown from the yellow leaves that carpeted it, how all the living things were anguishing with thirst. Twigs snapped under one's feet like dry bones, there was an ugly growl instead of a happy hum from the insects—it seemed that only the tough blue-bottles could survive. Not far from the stream where the earth in the bed of a spring was still damp, one cricket was singing gratefully but there were few of his fellows about. Leaves on tall weeds hung to the stem like a flag at half-staff on a day when no breeze stirs, one yellow-headed flower stood out in a spot of color, it looked like a very sleepy little girl, her damp locks glued to her face almost concealing her tired smile.

I thought: "I wish I could stay here until the rain comes, singing through the leaves, wetting cracked lips of the peeling furrows—I believe I would hear a real hymn of rejoicing go up."

ON THE HOME FRONT
with RUTH WYETH SPEARS

THIS old fashioned saw tooth quilt pattern has been used for the border of many handsome quilts. It is so modern looking and so simple to piece that it should serve many decorative purposes. Here it trims kitchen curtains of unbleached muslin. In addition to its old time use its angular note would make it effective as a border for luncheon cloths, aprons and various other purposes.

To make a pattern cut a square of cardboard, then cut diagonally; one half will make a triangle pattern. The size suggested in sketch may vary according to the purpose in mind. If a bright color is used for the plain triangles, a narrow border will make a good showing.

Lawyer Met His Match In Tinsmith, On and Off

A lawyer, noted for his success in cross-examination, asked a witness how long he had worked at his business of tin-roofing.

"I have worked at it off and on for some time."

"How long off and on?"

"Sixty-five years."

"How old are you?"

"Sixty-five."

"Then you have been a tin-roofer from birth?"

"No, sir, of course I haven't."

"Then why do you say you have worked at your trade 65 years?"

"Because you asked how long off and on I had worked at it. I have worked at the trade 65 years —20 years on and 45 off."

Here there was a roar in the courtroom, but not at the expense of the witness, and the lawyer hurriedly finished his examination in great confusion.

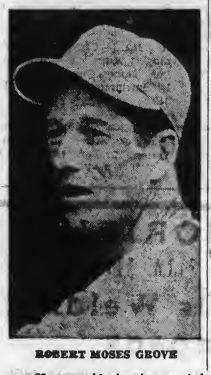
SPEAKING OF SPORTS

by Bob McShane

Released by Western Newspaper Union.



EVEN when Rip Sewell, Pirate hurler, charged into the early days of August with a record of 17 victories against only 3 defeats there was little chance for him to match the percentage records established by pitchers of happier years.

One of those records was established by Robert Moses Grove, probably the greatest left-hander of all time. Grove set a season record and a two-year record that other stars of the first magnitude never heve been able to match.

Grove's top year was 1931 when he won 31 games and dropped only 4 for the Athletics. His percentage was .886. The year before he won 28 and lost 5. That's the record: in two successive seasons under Connie Meek, Grove won 59 games and dropped 8 for a two-year percentage of .867.

The Beginning

The tall, lanky off-side pegger let fly his first professional pitch as e member of the Martinsburg team in the Blue Ridge league in 1920. He was 25 years old when he reported to Mack's Athletics in 1925.

Economical Mack, who always preferred to develop his own players from sandlotters, paid the Baltimore Orioles $165,000 for Lefty, but it proved a bargain. For after using Grove nine years—his best nine—Mack passed him on to Tom Yawkey's Red Sox with Max Bishop and George Walberg for twe players and $125,000.

Lefty was wilder than the South Pecific jungles when he first came up. But Mack knew the answer. Grove hurried too much. He pitched the ball back to the catcher as fast as he received it. Meck forced Grove to count 13 before each delivery, and in a year's time the bases on balls dropped and his strikeouts soared.

Grove led the American league in earned-run percentage nine years—1926, '29, '30, '31, '32, '35, '36, '38 and '39. He won 16 consecutive games in one season—from June 13 to August 19, 1931.

Other Records

In 1912 Joe Wood, with the Red Sox, won 34 and lost 5 for a percentage of .872.

Walter Johnson's top yeer was 1913 when he won 36 and lost 7 for Washington. Percentage—.837.

In 1905 Christy Mathewson won 31 and lost 9 for the Giants. Grover Alexander won the same number and lost 10 for the Phillies of 1915.

In more recent years Vernon Gomez won 26 and lost 5 for the Yankees of 1934, a percentage of .839. Two years later Carl Hubbell won 26 and lost 6 for the Giants. Dizzy Dean won 30 for the Cardinals in 1934 while losing 7.

This is only a partial list, picked from the topnotchers.

In the past 40 years only two pitchers have won 40 or more games. They were Jack Chesbro who won 41 for the Yankees in 1904 and Ed Walsh who won 40 for the 1908 White Sox.

Grove started out as a fire bell hurler. He had terrific speed. It is doubtful if any other left-hander ever had as fastra ball as Grove's. Strictly a thrower, he poured it on for every pitch. No hurler could hope to maintain that pace forever and Grove one day found his speed waning.

No one knows what the future will bring—but the name of Bob Grove will be a permanent part of the records book.

TO YOUR Good Health

by DR. JAMES W. BARTON

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

BLOOD DONORS

One of the ways of serving one's country these days is by giving some blood to be stored until such time es it is needed by our wounded soldiers. The transfusion of the blood itself or concentrations of the blood bring meny a shocked soldier back from the brink.

Dr. Barton

There are what are called professional donors, or givers of blood who are "on call" from various hospitals, and the giving of a pint of blood every couple of months causes no faintness or weakness at the time or afterward.

Such, however, is the demand for blood and so willing are men end women to help in the war that many are volunteering for this service at the Red Cross or other blood depots.

As some of these "new" donors are high-strung or nervous individuals who have conscientiously felt that they should give blood, a few of them may faint during the giving of the blood or even after they return to their work. It can readily be seen that a man or woman who faints after he or she returns to work is not likely to encourage other workers to give their blood.

It is agreed that those who faint from other sights or events in life are likely to faint when they give up some blood, but fainting should not ordinarily occur in others who are not in the habit of fainting.

An article in the British Lancet states that factors which do seem to contribute to fainting are fatigue and hunger; persons who hurry to their eppointment to give blood are likely to faint, as ere those who have not eaten for three hours or more.

"It is stated that the temperature and moisture of the room ere not important, but it should be airy and light, with beds rather than couches, and no screens used, as there is comfort in the knowledge thet others are going through the same ordeel."

In general blood donors should remain lying down for 15 minutes, and after refreshment should sit on e chair for another 15 minutes, leeving the hospital not sooner than 30 minutes efter giving their blood.

These points should be kept in mind by those giving blood for others. First, do not hurry to the appointment; second, go within one to two hours after eating; third, lie down for 15 minutes after giving blood; fourth, sit down for another 15 minutes before returning to work.

Pain in Shoulders, Arms and Neck

During the last war among soldiers and civilians there were many cases where the patients suffered with pains back of neck, in shoulder and down the arms to the hand. It was thought to be a form of rheumatism or arthritis, and teeth, tonsils, gums, gall bladder and other parts were carefully examined but often no cause could be found. Finally an X-rey of the neck, chest and shoulder showed in some cases a "short" or extra rib which was causing pressure on the nerve which eccompanies one of the muscles running from the top of the first rib to spinal bones in back of neck. The removal of this spur, or short rib, gave instant relief in these cases.

In Archives of Physical Therapy, Dr. K. G. Hanson states that this group of symptoms called cervicobrachial syndrome (name of the nerves involved) may be due to: (1) high first ribs which do not give the muscle and nerve room between the bones of the shoulder, (2) extra rib or e rib or spur on the neck spinal bone where there should be no rib or spur, (3) pressure on the muscle running from first rib to spinal bones in neck, (4) poor posture, standing or sitting which makes a pull on the bones where this muscle is fastened at back of neck. It is this pull that caused the pain in prectically all cases, because the patient lets himself seg.

The treatment, naturelly, would be to remove this pressure and this is obtained by rest and support during the acute or severe stage. Then exercises are given to hold the shoulders high—arms in line and above the shoulders, rolling of shoulders—arms at full length in line with shoulders; standing and sitting erect, shoulders high and back, chest out, chin in. Heat is applied before and efter exercise. This will help 85 per cent of the cases.

Lynn Says:

Color in Your Meals: Do you realize that your eyes eet that food before you actually eat it yourself? If food looks dull and unettractive, your appetite lags and the food, if eeten is consumed without much relish.

The eye wants contrast. Pick foods that go well together. You can serve several green vegetables for one meal, but not several all-white vegetables or allred.

Combine meat and vegetables on one platter to get a design and save plates besides. Use garnishes with care and give them an opportunity to bring out the color in your food.

Sprinkle beets with a little lemon juice to make them a more intense red. Cook green vegetables only until done to assure them of being crisp, green.

A dash of lemon juice on apples, pears or other fresh fruit will prevent it from darkening.

Christmas Gifts For Army and Navy Personnel Overseas Should Be Mailed Between Sept. 15th and Oct. 15th.

decided decline in spirit with a consequent letdown in efficiency.

A disconsolate soldier or sailor who thinks he has been forgotten at Christmas obviously is not at his best. So the gifts MUST be mailed on time so that they can arrive on time.

Rules for Christmas mailings to the fighting forces overseas were made public in June for the guidance of early shoppers. They include:

The parcel must not exceed five pounds, and must not be more than 15 inches in length or 36 inches in length and girth combined. It should be marked "Christmas parcel" so that it may be given special attention to assure its arrival before December 25th.

Not more than one parcel may be mailed in any one week to the same member of the armed forces by or in behalf of the same mailer.

The parcel must be well and strongly packed, in a container of metal, wood, strong fiber board, or similar material, then wrapped in strong paper and tied with twine. The cover should be such that it can be opened readily for censorship. The contents should be packed tightly.

Perishable goods, such as fruits that may spoil, are prohibited. Intoxicants, inflammable materials such as matches or lighter fluids, poisons, and anything that may damage other mail also are prohibited. Gifts enclosed in glass should be substantially packed to avoid breakage. Sharp instruments, such as razors and knives, must have their edges and points protected so that they connot cut through the coverings and injure postal personnel or damage other packages.

Since the armed forces are being plentifully supplied with food and clothing, the Army and Navy recommend against these as gifts.

Addresses must be written clearly and completely. In addition to the return address of the sender, a parcel for an Army man should show the name, rank, Army serial number, branch of service, organization, Army post office number, and name of post office through which the parcel is routed. A typical address for an Army man:

Private John R. Doe
(Army serial number)
ompany F, 167th Infantry

Walton-Verona School Opens

The Walton-Verona School opened Tuesday morning, Sept. 7th with a good enrollment.

The opening exercises were attended by a large number of visitors and parents.

The devotional was conducted by Rev. D. E. Bedinger and the speaker of the morning was the Hon. John L. Vest, prominent attorney, who spoke on the subject, "Conditions After the War." Out of the past thirty consecutive years Mr. Vest has been present at the opening exercises of the Walton School on twenty-eight occasions.

Announcements and a short talk on "Teacher Shortage" was given by Supt. H. P. Baker. Following this the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Geo. S. Caroland.

After the assembly program the P. T. A. met and the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. Glenna Cleek; Vice-Pres., Mrs. Myrtle Carlisle; Secretary, Mrs. Mildred Vest and Treasurer, Mrs. Beatrice Glenn.

Sauerkraut From Surplus Cabbage

With a big crop of cabbage to be taken care of, Food Specialists Florence Imlay and Pearl Haak of the Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics suggest that some of it be made into sauerkraut. A copy of the leaflet, "How to Make Sauerkraut and Sulfured Apples," may be had without charge from county or home demonstration agents, or from the college.

The cutting of the cabbage, the proportion of salt to cabbage, and the combining of the two are briefly stated. The care during fermentation and the preservation for a year-round supply are also explained.

The leaflet also gives directions for sulfuring apples. The equipment is simple, consisting of a large barrel with cover, sulfur candles or flowers of sulfur, a heavy pan for the coals, basket with cheesecloth lining or trays and a broomstick or pole. The process takes only 3 to 4 hours and, when late fall apples are used, they are preserved for several months. Stored in earthenware crocks or jars, the apples are ready for stewing, pies or for puddings.

Reemployment Program for Disabled Service Men Announced.

W. H. Fraysure, state director of the War Manpower Commission, today announced a state-wide program for reemployment of discharged service men.

The program, Fraysure said, will be under the immediate supervision of Harry H. Jeffries, Veterans Employment Representative for Kentucky, and Joseph R. Ware, senior field supervisor of the United States Employment Service.

Under the plan announced by the state manpower director all returning service men will be registered for employment prior to their discharge from the armed forces, by specially trained interviewers from the United States Employment Service offices who will be stationed at army camps and hospitals for that purpose.

Through the nation-wide clearance system of over 1500 USES offices, efforts will be made to find employment in the state in which the discharged service man prefers to work.

Many of these returning service men who have been found unfit for military life will be able to fill important war production jobs, Fraysure said, and will materially increase the present depleted manpower pool.

The WMC, according to Fraysure, by setting up its work-finding program for discharged veterans early, hopes to avoid a repetition of the situation which occurred at the end of the last World War when the nation was totally unprepared to cope with the problem of finding work for the thousands of soldiers released from service.

Further details of the program, which will include many other services to returning veterans, will be announced later when plans are more fully developed, Fraysure declared.

The Blue Ribbon or Klondike is a late variety, not an extra heavy yielder but makes up the difference in quality. Stone Mountain No. 5 and Kleckly No. 6 are the next two most popular wilt resistant varieties discovered during the past twelve years.

Growers with commercial acreages of the new variety includes Aylor Brothers, John J. Klopp, William Burns, John Burns, Andy Cook, Bobby Rogers and Ewing Flick.

Electric Wiring Materials Limited

The supply of electric wiring materials available for farm repairs and extensions in the county that can be approved has been limited to 75 pounds of copper per quarter or three months period according to the Boone County USDA War Board.

This is a drastic cut in farm electric wire materials that had previously been approved by the board under priority ratings and will make it more difficult to secure copper wire materials. The board advises that dairy and poultry needs will receive first calls on allotments that are made available. No approval can be given for purchasing copper wiring for farm homes.

Sheep Association Completes Fifth Year With $476 Reserve.

The Boone County Sheep Protective Association completed its fifth successful year of operation with a net reserve of $476.76 according to J. W. Conley, secretary-treasure of the Association. The report was presented at the annual meeting held at Burlington on last Saturday afternoon, September 4th.

One hundred and seventeen of Boone County's three hundred and fifty sheep owners paid membership fees on 4382 sheep the past year. Seventeen different members suffered losses of a total 78 sheep from dogs with losses occuring on 25 different occasions. The losses the past year totalled $655.20 compared with only $488.00 in membership fees paid. The $167.20 association loss was paid out of the $643.96 reserve accumulated from previous years operations.

Sheep losses of members from dogs amounted to approximately 1.8 sheep per hundred headed, the highest rate on record. Stray dogs or dogs owned by parties unknown accounted for most of the sheep killed.

The Association considered the dog situation serious and urged that the sheriff be given full cooperation in the enforcement of the dog law and in the 100% collection of dog taxes. Practically all sheepmen are dog owners and dog lovers. However, the stray dog or dogs allowed to run unattended through the country are considered a menace and should be destroyed.

Timely Hints To Poultry Raisers

The feed situation shows no signs of getting better so we should do all in our power to utilize available feed to best advantage according to O. D. Perkinson, Asistant County Agent.

Old hens should be culled closely. Keep only those in production and sell them just as soon as they quit laying. Check your feeding methods and the condition of your hoppers and feeding boxes. A small hole or crack may cause a big loss at the present price of feed. Feed should be stored where rats will not waste the feed and destroy sacks. Plant a cover crop near the chicken house. A good cover crop will furnish a large amount of cheap protein feed.

September is the time to prepare the laying house and get the pulelts moved in. Don't keep any week looking crow headed pullets. Feed is too high priced to waste on common hens.

Birthday Celebrated

Quite a few relatives gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Fields and family in Covington Sunday and celebrated Mr. Fields 23rd birthday. All enjoyed a very lovely dinner and departed wishing him many more such happy occasions.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Napier of 727 Garrad St., Covington; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Napier of 417 W. 9th St., Covington; Mr. and Mrs. Earl Napier and baby of Norwood, O.; Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Donnelly of Southgate Ky.; Mrs. Dora Fields and son, John of Walton, Ky.; Mrs. Wanda Menfee and baby of Covington; Mr. Alfred Hume of Walton, Ky.; Miss Virginia Collins of Southgate, Ky.; Miss Rose Napier, Miss Faye Napier, Miss Ruby Napier, Miss Joan Shields, and Miss Alice Mae Shields.

Auction Sale

Maurice O'Connell will sell his 15-acre farm, on Maher Road, three miles west of Independence, Saturday, September 11, 2 P. M., fast time.

Included in the auction sale is a nice bungalow, with conveniences; outbuildings, some fruit, work horse, colt, fresh Jersey cow with calf, two heifers, bull, pigs, some farm tools, household furniture, etc. Possession immediately.

The sale will be conducted by Rel C. Wayman, 623 Washington St., Covington, with Lute Bradford auctioneer.

It Pays To Feed Good Milk Cows

Condition cows for freshings—eight weeks rest leads to greater milk production. Burned up pasture is not enough for cows during the rest period according to O. D. Perkinson, Assistant Co. Agent. The dry cow should have good pasture or hay and from 2 pounds to 4 pounds of grain daily, depending on condition.

With corn hard to get many dairymen have started using government wheat as the major grain in their ration. This wheat should be coursely ground and mixed with some bulky feed like distillers grains. Government wheat can be bought at the Lawrenceburg Flour Mill, Lawrenceburg, Indiana at $1.12 per bushel. The above price does not include hauling and sacks. Farmers planning to feed should buy now as the supply may soon be limited.

Feed good roughage liberally to your milking herd. It is the natural feed for the cow, also the cheapest food. Cows can't eat too much. The more good roughage a cow eats the less grain she will need to produce up to the limit of her inherent ability.

Feed your cows according to production. It pays to feed good cows even at the present price of feed. Try to get the larger part of the ration from good roughage, (pasture hay and silage), and feed just enough grain to keep the cow milking at her best and in good condition.

Mrs. S. B. Rich of Dry Ridge and sons, Joseph Lambert and James Allen and wife were guests of their relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Dave Vallandingham of So. Walton Sunday.

Well Fed Workers Make Well Equipped Fighters.

"Nutrition has come to be recognized as one of the most important factors in health and morale of industrial workers" stated Dr. Victor G. Heiser, Consulant to the National Association of Manufacturers Committee on healthful working conditions at a recent National Dairy Council Conference in Chicago. "This is especially true during a war time" he added. "It has gained increasing importance with the growing appreciation of the existence of what some have called a subnutritive state of hidden hunger."

Adequate nutrition is of particular importance in preventing excessive fatigue and in maintaining workers health according to Dr. Heiser. He pointed out that deficient diets may be responsible for such conditions as mental depression, indigestion, easy fatigue, loss of weight and their attendant complaints, as well as retarded learning ability, lower mental aptitude and visual defects. Milk is the most nearly complete food and is the one substance whose sole function in nature is to serve as a food.

"With supplies of milk reduced in some areas, these facts" comments Mrs. Ethel Austin Martin, Director of Nutrition for the National Dairy Council, "make it especially important that all milk be utilized in the most efficient way possible. In addition to adequate supplies for children, pregnant women and nursing mothers every effort should be made to provide factory and munition workers with at least a pint of milk daily in order that they may be able to keep supplies and munitions provided for the fighting forces."

Annual Methodist Conference Attended By Local Pastors.

Revival At Local Christian Church Begins Monday, September 13th.

The Walton Christian Church announces the beginning of a two week's revival, beginning Monday, September 13, under the leadership of the Rev. Joe Kennedy, Berea, Ky. evangelist, and the pastor, the Rev. George S. Caroland, song leader. The services will begin at 8:30 p. m., (EWT) each evening.

All members of the church are urged to tell their friends of the revival and to attend the services regularly — especially the first service, Monday night. All other folk of the community are cordially invited to attend as many services as possible.

Mass Meeting

3rd War Loan Drive to start September 9th. Mass meeting to be held at Walton School Auditorium on September 9th at 8:30 p. m.

The ringing of bells and blowing of sirens will herald the beginning of this important event.

It is the patriotic duty of every citizen of Walton-Richwood neighborhood to be present and lend your support to this drive. We must "back the attack" with dollars from the home front while the "boys" are facing the enemy on the battle front.

Third War Loan Now In Progress

The bells have rung this Thursday morning and the Third War Loan Drive is now on to raise Boone County's quota of $732,900

How well we perform this task assigned us depends upon the interest and desire of every one to help bring this war to a speedy victory by subscribing our very limit to War Bonds. Our soldiers are doing their bit on foreign fields, away from their home and loved ones. We are only asked to lend our money at interest with the principal returned to us at maturity of the bonds or in case of emergency the bonds can be cashed. This is a very small request by our Government compared to those young men who are doing our fighting and many dying to protect our homes. Certainly no one can rest well without having done their part by subscribing liberally in this Third War Loan Drive. Volunteer your services to your precinct Chairmen to help secure subscriptions besides making a large subscription yourself. What is your answer?

The John L. Jones Family Reunion was held at the home of Mrs. Jones in Florence on Sunday, September 5th. This is an annual occasion formerly held at the old home place down on the Ohio River near Big Bone.

Three of Mrs. Jones grandsons were absent, being in the Service while one, Lieut. J. L. Aylor was able to attend. Others attending were: Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Jones of Erlanger, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse C. Jones, Mr. H. Earl Williams and Mrs. Creighton Carstutter, Barbara, Stephen, and Patty Carstutter of Aurora, Ind.; Mr. Victor Williams of Rising Sun, Ind.; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Aylor, Jane Aylor, Duane Townsend, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Aylor, Mrs. J. L. Aylor and Nancey Huey of Petersburg, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Jones Jr. of Hebron, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Moore Jr. of East Bend; Mrs. Steve Wiester; Mrs. Ann Townsend and Jimmie Jones of Covington; Mrs. Jane Stephens of Silverton, Ohio; Mrs. Sallie R. Miller and Emma Jane of Walton; Mr. and Mrs. Ruben Asbury and Carol Ann of Hebron; Mr. and Mrs. Owen Bethel; Mrs. Maude Asbury and Mrs. Jones the hostess of Florence. Afternoons callers were Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Williams and LaVon of Deer Park, Ohio, and Mr and Mrs. Charles Williams of Dayton, Ohio.

Feed Production County's Biggest Livestock Problem

Feed production is becoming more and more Boone County's biggest war-time livestock production problem according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. The problem is becoming so serious that many livestock producers must give serious consideration to the adjustment of their operations.

The county normally is a deficit hay and corn production area. Livestock production is adjusted to the pasture carrying capacity of the land. Because of the present feed situation feeding practices must be changed so as to make greater uses of the pasture, hay and roughage crops produced and lesson the grains.

The most important thing that the average farmer can do right now is to look forward to late fall, winter an dearly spring pasture. Small grain is one of most important aids toward meeting this situation. Every acre of land possible that was cultivated this year should be seeded to small grain. If you can't get Balbo rye, Thorne wheat or other high yielding grains get what is available and get is seeded as soon as possible. Small grain seeds are scarce and hard to get.

Early seeded small grain makes several times more winter and spring pasture and represents a great saving in the hay requirements. Vetch adds to the value of the small grain and should be seeded where the same land is to be cultivated next year. Plenty of feed is the foundation of successful livestock operations.

See Here, Private Hargrove!

WNU SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: Private Marion Hargrove, former feature editor of the Charlotte (N. C.) News, has been inducted into the army and completed the first few weeks of his training at Fort Bragg. Before getting into the army, Hargrove advises selectees to "paint the town red." Once in, "the first three weeks are the hardest" so keep "an open mind." Hargrove has had plenty of trouble learning the fundamentals of army life and as a result has spent a good share of his time on KP duty. Classified as a cook he thinks it's good experience. His sergeant doesn't agree. Hargrove has learned a large portion of army slang and is about to enlighten the civilian on this score.

CHAPTER VI

When Junior comes home from camp on furlough or for the week-end, he probably will throw out his chest, pull his shoulders almost out of joint, and speak a sort of jargon entirely unintelligible to you. There is no cause for alarm; Junior is merely exaggerating to show off his familiarity with military life.

You will not be consulted by this knowledge when he begins speaking this unknown tongue. In order to understand some of his conversation, you might tear out this page and tuck it away in the drawer with your recipes and patterns.

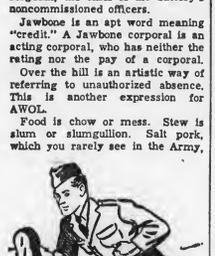
Goldbricking is an Army term signifying in a word, loafing. In its strictest sense, it means avoiding your fair share of the work, thus making the load harder for the other boys. When Junior uses the term, however, it merely means hiding from the work in the first place or stretching an easy job out to make it last as long as possible.

Belting the breeze is the military equivalent of "bullshooting."

Police, as nearly as it can be explained, means "to clean up" or "to keep clean." Examples are kitchen police, or kaypee, canteen police, and police the area.

Fatigue duty is work that is not actual military training, but a part of the turnabout method of getting the dirty work done. Fatigue clothes are the blue denims worn for extra duty. Regular uniforms are called OD's, an abbreviation for "olive drab."

GI is short for "Government Issue." GI soap is the yellow laundry soap, a GI brush is a hard-bristle scrubbing brush, and a GI haircut is the regulation style which sacrifices two-thirds of Junior's wavy locks to cleanliness and sanitation.



The PX is the post exchange, or canteen, a co-operative enterprise which sells practically everything the soldier needs. Three times a month, canteen books of credit tickets may be obtained in denominations from one to five dollars. Ten per cent of the proceeds from these are returned to the battery fund, which is used to buy nonessentials for the battery.

The old man is the battery commander, who may also be referred to among yourselves as the BC or the skipper. The top kick is a first sergeant, the chief of the battery's noncommissioned officers.

Jawbone is an apt word meaning "credit." A Jawbone corporal is an acting corporal, who has neither the rating nor the pay of a corporal.

Over the hill is an artistic way of referring to unauthorized absence. This is another expression for AWOL.

Food is chow or mess. Stew is slum or slumgullion. Salt pork, which you rarely see in the Army,

"Over the hill is an artistic way of referring to unauthorized absence —AWOL."

is called lamb chop. "They lam it against the wall to get the salt out of it and then they chop it up into the beans."

To fall out, soldiers vacate the barracks quickly, before the sergeant gets really mad. To fall in, they take their places in ranks.

A yardbird is the lowest form of animal life in an Army camp. Under the common law, he is rated as one rank below a buck private. The yardbird, for this misdeed or that shortcoming, spends most of his time in menial labor about the battery area.

When Junior refers to a yardbird, you will notice, he is invariably speaking of someone else.

It was our afternoon off and we were lying around in our barracks, too lazy to dress for a movie or a trip to the Service Club. All of us were, that is, except Private Zuber. With an enthusiasm and energy foreign to a cook's afternoon off, Zuber was applying a blinding glaze to his shoes. This finished, he connected an iron and began sharpening the creases in his trousers.

"Going somewhere, I take it," asked Private Clarkin, the Jersey milkman.

Private Zuber grinned happily, and nodded. He donned his fresh clothing, gave his necktie several unnecessary tugs, and combed his hair for the twelfth time.

Private McGlauflin, late of the Minneapolis bar, laid down his copy of the Bartender's Guide and sat up on his bunk. "Didn't you know?" he asked. "Zuber's girl's come down from Rochester. They're going riding."

"That's a fine thing," crowed Clarkin. "I haven't been for a spin since I've been here. Get your shoes on, Hargrove. And straighten your name plate, McGlauflin. We must make a good impression on our guest . . ."

"You sure are a pleasant surprise, ma'am," Clarkin prattled on to the pretty girl in the front seat. "Fancy Ben Zuber even knowing anybody like you. You should see the homely looking things he brings to the dances here."

She smiled a polite thank-you at Clarkin and glanced sharply at Zuber. "I never could even get him to the dances at home," she said. "He wouldn't even look at the girls at all. Would you, dear?"

"No, ma'am," groaned the martyred Zuber, who spent almost all his evening hours writing letters to Rochester.

"Just to look at Ben," said McGlauflin, "you'd never think such a quiet-seeming boy could raise so much devil. It constantly amazes me."

Private Zuber's girl friend's smile was not so spontaneous this time, and there was a baleful gleam in her glance at poor Benjamin. "What have you been doing, dear?" she asked with terrible gentleness.

Private McGlauflin went on glibly. "Tell her about the time you got tight in Fayetteville and tried to take the policeman's hat away from him, Ben!"

The one-girl audience was shocked. Her expression, as she looked at Zuber, was one of anxiety and doubt.

Clarkin began again. "And the terrible fight he had that time—ooof!" McGlauflin gave him a hearty dig in the ribs. To make sure that it had registered and created sufficient horrible curiosity in the feminine mind, he repeated it.

Private Zuber, guiltless but helpless, drooped his shoulders further as the terrible ride continued. "Here's the Service Club, dear," he finally said. "Shall we go in and have something to drink?" He gave the three of us a pathetically beseeching glance.

"They don't sell lemon extract in there, Zuber," I suggested. Clarkin, McClauflin and I exchanged looks that purposed to show a hidden knowledge of another terrible paragraph in the collapse of the soul of Benjamin Zuber.

We sat at a table in the Service Club drinking the sodas our victim bought for us. Clarkin looked long at his glass of water.

"The sight of water," he remarked, "reminds me of what the sergeant was telling Ben last week about daily bathing."

McGlauflin took pity on the innocent Zuber, who was dying for a cause he knew not. "We'll have to be going. We have things to do and I imagine you two young people want to enjoy each other's company."

"Yes," said Zuber's fiancee slowly. "Ben and I have SO much to talk about." Private Zuber shuddered and his shoulders slumped tragically.

"We certainly have enjoyed the afternoon," crowed Clarkin. "Lovely time."

One of the first people I looked up when I went to Charlotte on leave was Ward Beecher Threatt, who writes a column of sorts for the Saturday edition of the Charlotte News.

"Well, Hargrove," began the postcard philosopher, "how's the Army agreeing with you? I've been aching to find out what you've been doing." This was a subtle slam at my column.

"Well, all things considered—" I began.

"Nothing like the Army," said Ward Beecher. "I wouldn't take a million dollars for the time I spent in it. Nobody'd offer me a million anyway. Have you got a rating yet?"

"Well—" I began again.

"Lord, did I have my ups and downs! Got all the way up to sergeant three times and was busted three times—for the good of the service." He paused to light another cigarette and I thought I saw an opening.

"Let me tell you about the trip over," I said. "We left the—"

"We started a crap game on the train," said Threatt, "and I had to wire home for money before I got to Rock Hill. Have you had a payday yet?"

"We'll have one—" I started.

"On that ocean voyage," he broke in. "I went for fourteen days without a cigarette. I followed one man all around the boat waiting for him to throw away a butt. Instead of throwing it on the deck, where I could have scooped it, he flung it over the rail. I followed another and just when I thought he'd be ready to throw it away, I asked him for the butt. The son-of-a-gun told me he had three different kinds of colds—and he threw his cigarette over the side. He didn't have another, he said."

"We landed at Brest," he said, "and we had to walk up one of the longest dermed hills I've ever seen before we could drop our suitcases. The Frenchmen swarmed around us, selling everything from steamer trunks to fine-toothed combs. Twenty of us boys pooled our pocket money to buy a pack of cigarettes for fifty cents. What are you going to spend your first pay on?"

"Oh, I suppose I'll—"

"First payday I had I went out and bought myself a pack of cigarettes and lay awake almost all night smoking them. Best cigarettes I ever tasted. By the way, how's the food at Fort Bragg?"

"I find it very—"

"Over in France we used to take our drinking water and swap it to the French for wine. It was a toss-up which tasted worse—our water or their wine. Ah, them was the days! Like your uniform?"

"I think it's very—"

"Nothing like the ones we wore. There we were, in the hottest part of the summer, with these woolen OD's, Russian high collars, wrap-around leggins, and all the works. How do you like my costume?"

"Well, confidentially—"

"This field cap ain't the one they issued to me. I lost that one and had to help myself to this one. I wouldn't tell you where I got it. I used to get into more potato-peeling work for not getting this collar fixed right, too. Looks right distinguished, doesn't it?"

I looked at the modernistic clock on Ward Beecher's parlor table. I took my eyes off it quickly, lest he tell me again about how he won it at the firemen's convention.

"Well, Ward," I said, jumping desperately into a gap in the conversation. "I've enjoyed talking to you about my life in the Army, but I have to get along uptown again. I've got—"

"Sure thing, fellow," said the man of letters; "it certainly is interesting to hear from a soldier in this army. I could listen to you for hours."

When a sergeant tells you that it's the little things in life that are important, he's not just saying it. A sergeant who impresses that one corny slice of homely philosophy upon a rookie's mind is giving him one of the most important lessons of his Army life.

The soldier has a thousand and one small things to remember in his everyday life. Most of these he forgets at least once before a non-com etches them vividly on his mind with kitchen duty.

At retreat, the afternoon inspection of the soldiers, I always check everything before I fall out for the onceover. Are my shoes shined? Is my rifle cleaned and oiled? Is my name plate pinned straight over my left shirt pocket? Can I get by with this morning's shave? Do I need a haircut? Are all my pockets buttoned? When I make sure that everything is as it should be, I sigh with satisfaction and fall out.

The battery assembles in a neat, precise picture of mass formation. The battery commander orders the top kick to "Prepare the battery for inspection!" The top kick opens the ranks and the lines straighten out to perfection. From where I stand, everything looks perfect.

The battery commander begins his inspection. Until he gets almost to me, I feel almost smug to think that for once I've stood retreat and not fallen short somewhere. I bask in my own perfection, I sneak a forbidden peek at my gun and uniform.

Then, to my horror, I see two shiny strands of stainless steel just below my belt—the chain on that dadblasted dollar watch! Your whole day can be spoiled by doodads such as that marring the neatness and simplicity of your uniform. Back to the kitchens, Dulcy!

There's one good thing, however, about forgetting to take off your nonkosher watch chain for retreat, or to put on your leggins for reveille, or to straighten the shoes under your bunk! After the first time, you remember them!

TREATMENT OF EPILEPSY

A few years ago the recognized treatment for epilepsy was the use of bromides. Bromides are drugs which depress or quiet irritable nerves, thus preventing convulsions, preventing vomiting and producing sleep. They are useful drugs. However, as they had to be used continuously in epileptics to prevent or relieve attacks, the patient was usually in a depressed and often a melancholy condition.

Dr. Barton

While the cause of epilepsy is still unknown, thousands of epileptics now have no attacks and the attacks in others are so mild that little thought is given to them. However, the great advance in the treatment of epilepsy did not occur by chance. Patient scientific investigation of all the circumstances that could possibly enter into the cause of epilepsy and the trying of methods of treatment has, in most cases, made the lives of epileptics much happier and less embarrassing and distressing.

Dr. D. S. Polk, in the Pennsylvania Medical Journal, states that a broad or all round investigation should be made in seeking the cause of epilepsy in children. There must be careful investigation of the child's adjustment to his surroundings and any physical defects or abnormal conditions removed. Infected teeth, diseased tonsils and adenoids, gland disturbances should be removed or corrected, and nourishing food assured.

What is called the ketogenic diet is still the basis of treatment; this diet increases the fat foods—butter, cream, egg yolks—and decreases the starch foods—potatoes, bread, sugar.

The drug used by Dr. Polk to prevent or control the attacks in children living at home or as patients in the Philadelphia Children's Hospital clinic is sodium dilantin. This drug —sodium dilantin—sometimes causes a reaction which has prevented some physicians from using it despite the fact that phenobarbital has failed to give satisfactory results in their cases. Dr. Polk states that sodium dilantin is very effective in preventing or decreasing the convulsions in epilepsy and in "ordinary" doses does not depress the other brain processes; that there is a wide margin between the ordinary dose and the dangerous dose. Further, even where there are mild reactions from sodium dilantin, the physician and patient may feel confident that these mild disturbances will disappear. In the diet treatment, liquids are decreased, as too much liquid in the tissues may bring on an attack.

Sick Infants Need 'Mothering'

When we think of how the death rate at birth, and during the first year, has been reduced from about three in every 10 children to less than three in every 20, it is naturally gratifying. And when we think further and realize that children can be rendered safe from the children's diseases that formerly carried away so many, we are even more gratified. Naturally, much of this saving of children's lives has been made possible by hospital investigation and treatment.

However, every physician realizes that what is called the human touch, element or equation, has much to do with how a child patient progresses during his stay in hospital.

Infants in hospitals sleep less than those who are at home, they rarely smile or babble of their own accord, they are listless, uninterested in their surroundings and unhappy, the appetite is indifferent and food is accepted without enthusiasm, and nose, throat and chest infections which last only a day or two at home often persist for months in hospital. The infants are lonely.

To make the child still more lonely, he is often placed in a room by himself when an infection breaks out in a ward.

To help remove this loneliness and give the child some "mothering," the internes and nurses in Bellevue hospital, New York city, are encouraged to mother, cuddle and play with the infants at every opportunity and parents are invited to the ward and invited to fondle the children. This "mothering" has caused a marked drop in the infant death rate at Bellevue hospital.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

ISRAEL MARCHES TOWARD CANAAN

LESSON TEXT—Numbers 10:11, 12, 29-36.

GOLDEN TEXT—Come thou with us, and we will do thee good.—Numbers 10:29.

There is a time to wait before God, to be instructed and prepared for holy living. There is also a time for action. When God says, "Move forward," His people are to arise and be on their way.

Israel, who had now been more than a year on the way from Egypt to Canaan, had been resting for a time at Mt. Sinai, there receiving instruction and being organized into a nation. They had set up a place of worship in their midst, and now they were ready to go on. That is God's will for His people. They are to

I. Move Toward the Goal (vv. 11, 12).

God had a schedule. He wanted them to move forward on a certain day (v. 11). Since the Jewish religious year, referred to here, began with the spring equinox, this was about the middle of May. The dry season was ahead—a good time to travel.

Those who think the purposes of God for men are nebulous and uncertain, and that He has no real plan for us, are obviously mistaken. His plan is good and acceptable and perfect; let us find and follow it.

We do not have a pillar of cloud and fire to move before us. We do not need it, for we, unlike the Israelites, have God's Word for our guide, and His Holy Spirit as the One who will tell every responsive soul when and where to go.

The important thing is to obey, promptly and willingly, and we shall have the blessing of God.

II. Bring Others With You (vv. 29-32).

Those who go up to the promised land should not go alone, they should bring others with them.

Moses, who had been in touch with the family of his father-in-law (known both as Jethro and Raguel or Reuel), now sees the value of having with him his brother-in-law, who was so acquainted with the great and terrible wilderness through which they were to pass that he could be invaluable as a guide and helper.

In giving him the invitation, however, Moses stressed the opposite thought—that it would be good for Hobab if he came with them. That was doubtless true, but it was not the right approach.

Men do not respond to the opportunity for advantage in spiritual things as readily as to the challenge to usefulness. The motive of acquisition is strong, but the best folk are not as interested in what they can get as what they can give.

The church may stress too much its value as a place of refuge and not enough the unparalleled opportunity it affords for sacrificial service.

When Moses changed his plea and revealed his need of Hobab, the response was immediate. He had thus won a friend and a helper.

III. Follow God's Guidance (vv. 33-36).

God gave special guidance on this occasion. The ark which commonly was found in the midst of the people, now moved out before them.

It was the symbol of God's presence. As they went out into the wilderness (which Deut. 1:19 calls "great and terrible") it was as though God Himself went before them.

Is not this always true? The "Captain of Our Salvation," Jesus Christ, is not One who tarries in safety at the rear and sends up orders for us to attack life's problems. He goes before us!

The pillar of cloud hovered over the people as though to give them shelter from the beating sun of the desert. God is mindful of the road His people must travel, and in His loving-kindness provides for their protection and care.

In our day there are many who are tempted to question whether God knows of their trials and afflictions. He does, and He will not permit them to be tried beyond their ability to bear it.

When the ark went forward, their leader, Moses, addressed God in the stirring words of verse 35. The people whose God is the Lord may count on Him to scatter their enemies.

All of human life is either a journey or a battle, and often it is both. We must arise and make valiant war against the forces of evil if we are to move forward for God. But we must recall that our foes, as Christians, are also God's foes.

The battle is not ours, but God's, and we do well to call on Him to rise up and smite the enemy.

Note that after the forward march came a time of rest. God always gives His people an opportunity for needed rest.

NEW EFFECTIVE HAY FEVER RELIEF

Hay fever, which annually causes more sneezes, more inflamed noses and more red, streaming eyes than any other scourge, may have its final big fling this September, all because a Pennsylvania electrical engineer was served a dish of corn meal mush which was entirely too salty.

The engineer, sneezing, and with all other hay fever manifestations, stopped at a hotel where he was served a dish of mush which he considered sending back as it was much too salty. Finally he ate it, however; the hay fever attack lessened, ultimately ceased. Next day he had three meals, all oversalted, and experienced his most comfortable time in years in the "hay fever season."

His analytical mind quickly grasped the possibility that the saline substance in his food was responsible for his relief.

About this time, Dr. E. E. Selleck, a graduate of Columbia University, met the engineer, made notes, and when he returned to his home, began experiments. Today Dr. Selleck declares he has found a certain means of relief for hay fever and is supported in his contention by other medical experts, and a nationally known chemical manufacturing concern, the Hollings-Smith Company, at Orangeburg, New York, has taken over making the remedy, which is called Nakamo Bell.

Describing the experiments, Dr. Selleck said, "After I was sure I had found a means of quickly relieving hay fever through the chloride group, I tested it in the most practical way I knew. I held a three day clinic, to which many hay fever sufferers responded, from ages ranging from 10 to 60 years. Each person was given two tablets with a little water. Some relief came to all within ten minutes. Reports on these cases during the ensuing weeks showed practically a complete cessation of symptoms."—Adv.

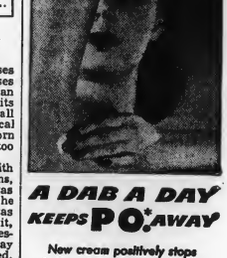
SLAVE TO PURGATIVES FINDS FREEDOM!



Feels 20 Years Younger, He Says!

Everyone who has despaired of ever finding normal regularity should read this unsolicited letter:

"Six years ago, I was quite constipated. I'd taken many so-called 'cures', but it was the same old story. It seemed that each dose had to be stronger than the last. Then, I tried KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN. Soon I was 'regular' again, with none of the old griping pain. I'm 56, but feel younger than 20 years ago. When I was a victim of common constipation." Mr. A. Bonafield, 428 S. Villa Avenue, Villa Park, Ill.

What's the secret of such reports of ALL-BRAN's wonderful results? It's simply this: Lack of certain cellulosic elements in the diet is a common cause of constipation. Scientists say KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN is a rich, natural source of these elements—which help the colonic flora do their job —lightening and fluffing the accumulated waste for easy, natural evacuation. ALL-BRAN is not a purgative! Not roughage that acts by "sweeping you out"! It's a gentle-acting, "regulating" food!

Eat ALL-BRAN regularly. Drink plenty of water. See if you, too, don't find the relief you've dreamed of! Insist on the genuine ALL-BRAN! It is made only by Kellogg's in Battle Creek.

Speaking of Sports

by Bob McShane

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

SPINE-TINGLING sports events of past years were recalled recently in a poll conducted by Esquire magazine. Voters were asked to nominate the six greatest sporting events of the century. The results are, in some instances, surprising. Here they are:

1—The Jack Dempsey-Gene Tunney fight in Chicago September 22, 1927. (This was the long count fight.)

2—Bobby Jones' Grand Slam of the four major golf titles in 1930.

3—Jesse Owens' three firsts in the 1936 Olympic Games.

4—The deciding game of the 1926 World Series in New York when Grover Alexander struck out Tony Lazerri with the bases full as the Cardinals won the championship.

5—Babe Ruth's "called" home run against the Cubs in the 1932 World Series in Chicago.

6—Red Grange's five long runs for touchdowns for Illinois against Michigan at Urbana, Ill., October 18, 1924.

Why It Won

The surprising factor of the vote is the first place position. There have been many more important sports events than the Dempsey-Tunney fight. But it did get a terrific amount of newspaper space because of the controversy. Then, too, it is likely that more people understand boxing than any other sport. People who don't understand the rules of football, baseball or golf do possess a fundamental knowledge of fighting.

Jack Dempsey

The details of that fight are still fresh in the memory of a good share of adult sports fans. Dempsey dropped Gene in the seventh round of the fight. But Jack refused to go to a neutral corner when first ordered to do so by the referee. When he finally did heed the warnings, sufficient time had passed for Tunney to regain his senses. Gene did so well in later rounds that he won the decision.

By an odd quirk of fate, it was a rule Dempsey had helped put on the books that gave Tunney his extra five-second reprieve. In a battle with Luis Firpo, the Manassa Mauler had Firpo on the floor seven times in the first round. Each time he would stand over the Argentine and then, before he had time to get back on his feet, smack him down again.

It was that, as much as anything, which persuaded the boxing fathers to write in a rule stating that, on a knockdown, a fighter must retire to a neutral corner before the count could start. And the rule led to one of sports' biggest arguments.

Grand Slam Champ

Jones' record is one of the best in all sporting history. One of golfing's immortals, he won his first championship when he was only eight years old. As a "boy wonder" in his teens and early twenties he astounded the world of golf by his ability. In 1930, when he was 28, he reached the pinnacle of fame by making the unprecedented "grand slam"—heading the victorious American Walker Cup team in matches with Great Britain and winning, in succession, the British Amateur, the British Open, the United States Open and United States Amateur championships.

Bobby Jones

Then, when most champions are just beginning to hit their best strides, Bobby had no more worlds to conquer. He announced his retirement.

Jones did not win his first national title until 1923, when at 21 he beat Bobby Cruickshank in a playoff for the crown of the United States at Inwood Country club, Long Island. In all he won 13 major championships—the U. S. Amateur five times, the U. S. Open four times, the British Open three times and the British Amateur once.

The "six greatest sporting events of the century" are just what each enthusiast thinks they are. It is not likely that very many voters would agree on the top six—much less their individual ranking.

But it would be a difficult task to find six more thrilling events in the history of sport. Time has not dulled their glamour—and that's about the truest of all tests.

SPORTS SHORTS

¢ Pitt expects to get 50,000 into the Stadium for its game September 25 with Notre Dame. That attendance would be almost as much as the Panthers drew all last season.

¢ For the first time in many years the United States Golf association has not issued an edition of golf rules.

¢ Red Lucas, 41, former pitcher for the Reds and Pirates, is getting in shape at his home in Nashville. He figures the manpower shortage may lead to his big league comeback.

CHATTERER CARELESS

When you grow careless, even though
It be in matters small,
Old Mr. Trouble you will find
Is bound to make a call.

SOME people never seem to learn this. You would suppose that after all the trouble and worry Chatterer the Red Squirrel had had he would have learned a lesson. For a while it seemed as if he had. Morning after morning, before anybody was up in Farmer Brown's house, he visited the corncrib, taking the greatest care not to be seen and to get back to his home in the Old Orchard before it was time for Farmer Brown's Boy to come out and do his morning's work. And in the corncrib he took the greatest care to steal only where what he took would not be missed. The empty cobs from which he had eaten the corn he hid in the darkest corner behind the great pile of yellow corn, where they would not be found until nearly all the corn had been taken from the crib. Oh, he was very sly and crafty, was Chatterer the Red Squirrel—at first.

But after a while, when nothing happened, especially after Sammy Jay had stopped making trouble for him, Chatterer grew careless. At first it had seemed very dangerous to go over to the corncrib, but after he had been there often it didn't seem dangerous at all. Once inside he would just give himself up to having a good time. He raced about over the great pile of beautiful yellow corn, and found the loveliest hiding places in it. Down in a dark corner he made a splendid bed from pieces of husk which hadn't been stripped from some of the ears. It was quite the nicest place he ever had dreamed of, was Farmer Brown's corncrib. He got to feeling that it was his own and not Farmer Brown's at all.

The more that feeling grew the more careless Chatterer became. He dropped a grain of corn now and then and was too lazy to go down and pick it up, or else didn't think anything about it. Farmer Brown's Boy, coming every morning for corn for the hens, noticed these grains, but supposed they were some that had been rubbed from the ears during the handling of them. Then one morning Chatterer dropped a cob from which he had eaten all the corn. He meant to get it and hide it as he had hidden other cobs, but he didn't want to do it just then. And then—well, then he forgot all about it. Yes, sir, he forgot all about it until he had reached his home in the Old Orchard.

Presently he came back with a ratrap and a mousetrap.

"Oh, well," thought Chatterer, "it doesn't matter. I can get it and hide it tomorrow morning."

Now a corncob is a very simple thing. Farmer Brown's Boy knew where there was a whole pile of them. He added to that pile every day after shelling enough corn for the biddies. So it would seem that there was nothing about a corncob to make him open his eyes as he did that morning when he saw the one left by Chatterer the Red Squirrel. But you see he knew that a bare corncob had no business inside the corncrib, and suddenly those scattered grains of corn had a new meaning for him.

"Zia, ha!" he exclaimed, "a thief has been here, after all! I thought we were safe from rats and mice, and I don't see now how one got in, for I don't, I really don't see how he could climb the stone legs of the corncrib. But someone with sharp teeth certainly has been in here. It must be that I've left the door open some time and a rat has slipped in. I'll just have to get after you Mr. Rat or Mr. Mouse! We can't have you in our corncrib."

With that he went into the house. Presently he came back, and in one hand was a ratrap and in the other a mousetrap.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Experience shows that tire failures during the four hot months from June to September average 20 per cent higher than during the rest of the year.

Rubber sheeting should be washed with soap and warm water, thoroughly rinsed and then cleaned with a 3 per cent solution of cresol, to get the longest service out of the rubber. Roll, don't fold, when not in service.

The granddad of the present-day raincoat, the Macintosh, was patented in England in 1823 by Charles Macintosh, of Glasgow, Scotland.

How to Line Your Casement Curtains

QUAINT chintz curtains are always appropriate for casement windows and their colors give the best effect by day if they are lined to keep the light from shining through. At night they may be drawn together to serve instead of shades if the lining is of fairly heavy material.

The secret of making curtains of this type hang well is in not joining the two layers of material at the bottom. If your windows are narrow, a half width of chintz and of lining may be wide enough for each curtain. Plan them to be wide enough to hang slightly full when drawn together. The lining should be cut one inch narrower and shorter than the chintz. Hem each piece, then place right sides together and stitch side seams, as shown at the right of this sketch. Crease sides with seams on the lining, then stitch across top. The lower sketch shows how the top is finished.

Household Hints

If the garden hose should spring a leak, try painting it with roofing paint.

When the linoleum is particularly soiled, put a few drops of kerosene in the pail when washing it up.

A cool summer dessert is cantaloupe rings filled with ice cream, garnished with chopped nuts or preserved ginger.

Avoid starch if the linens are to be put away for a length of time. Starch is inclined to make the linen crack. Fold away unstarched and wrap in blue paper to prevent yellowing.

"TOWN AND FARM IN WARTIME"

Ration Reminder

Gasoline—In 17 states of eastern shortage area A-6 coupons are now good. In states outside the eastern shortage area A-7 coupons are good through September 21. All gasoline coupons in the possession of car owners must be endorsed with the owner's license and state of registration.

Fuel Oil—Period 5 coupons in old rations remain good through September 30. Period 1 coupons in new rations are good through December. Occupants of oil-heated homes are urged to return their applications for next year's fuel oil to their ration boards promptly and when issued new rations to place orders with their dealers for summer fill-ups.

Sugar—Stamp No. 14 good for 5 pounds through Oct. Stamps No. 15 and 16 good for 5 pounds each for home canning purposes through October 31.

Shoes—Stamp No. 18 is good for 1 pair through October 31.

Stoves—Consumer purchases of rationed stoves must be made with a certificate obtained at local War Price and Rationing Boards.

Meats, Fats—Red stamps X, Y and Z good through October 2. Brown stamp - becomes good September 12 and remains good through October 2.

Processed Foods—Blue stamps R, S and T, expire September 20, U, V and W, now good, expire October 20.

Farmers' War Bond Quota

Farmers have a war bond quota of 1½ billion dollars in the 15 billion dollar third war loan which begins September 9 ad continues through the month. During the campaign, canvassers expect to call upon as least 3,600,00 of the nation's 6 million farm homes Farmers' income figures point to big bond subscriptions. It is estimated that their cash income from marketing will be 19 billion dollars this year.

To Start Using Ration Book III

The first brown "point stamp" in War Ration Book III will become valid September 12. This stamp, A, is good for 16 points through October 2. Brown stamps will become valid on successive Sundays and will always expire on the Saturda ynearest the end of a month. They will be used for rationing meats, fats, oils, canned fish, cheese, canned milk, and all other commodities now rationed with red stamps in War Ration Book II. The small stamps bearing pitures of field guns, tanks, ships and airplanes are not yet in use. Anyone who has not received Book III may obtain one by applying to his local ration board.

Farm Items Under Price Control

Used hay loaders, side delivery rakes, and manure spreaders were recently placed under specific price control by OPA. This ruling applies when items are sold by any persons, such as farmers or auctioneers. Maximum prices will be determined on the following basis; 85 percent of the price of the machine when new, if the equipment is less than one year old, and 70 percent of the price of the item when new, if the equipment is one year old or more.

Overseas Christmas Mail

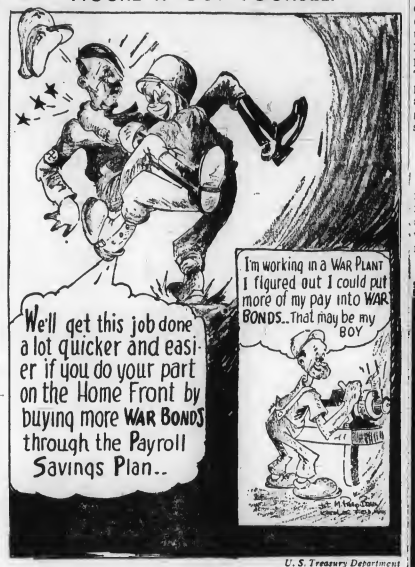
More than 10 million individual Christmas parcels for overseas soldiers are expected in the mailing period, September 15 to October 15. The Army Postal Service will need the full cooperation of the mailing public if packages are to reach soldiers in time. The public is asked to be sure to put the correct overseas mailing addresses on the packages and to wrap them securely, but in such a manner as to permit inspection prior to their dispatch. Every overseas package must be opened, inspected, and re-rapped at the port of embarkation. The Army Postal Service and the U. S. Post Office Department strongly urge that packages be mailed September 15 or immediately there after.

Ration Point Changes

Reflecting an improvement in civilian meat supplies, the ration cost of most lamb and bacon cuts, sirloin steak, and rib roasts has been reduced from one to two points for September. In addition, several variety meats also have lower point values. Creamery butter increased two points to 12 points per pound. Country butter, however, has been assigned a value of six points per pound. The purchasing power of meats-fats stamps in September will be a little larger than in August because the decrease in meat point values more than cancels the higher ration cost of creamery butter.

Nurse Corps Funds Approved

Funds have been approved to provide complete tuition, fees, stipends, maintenance and uniforms for an anticipated 10,175 student members of the U. S. Cadet Nurse Corps. Over 500 state accredited schools of nursing have applied to the U. S. Public Health Service for participation in the program. To date, 67 have been approved.



"Home Front Pledge" Drive On

A nation-wide, cooperative campaign by homemakers and merchants to hold down the cost of living and combat black markets is being conducted by volunteer civic committees in more than 100 communities through local drives to secure signers for a "Home Front" pledge. Nearly one million pledges have been signed already. Those signing agree (1) "I will pay no more than top legal prices" and (2) "I will accept no rationed goods without giving up ration stamps".

Hershey Shows Order Of Induction

"The selection of men needed for the armed forces and the deferment of men required for agriculture, war production and war supporting activities are much more difficult than in the days when we had ample men from which to choose," said Major General Lewis B. Hershey, Director of Selective Service, in a recent letter to local boards. He said, "Available men will be called for induction in the following order—(1) single men without dependents—(2) single men with collateral dependents—(3) married men without children—(4) men with children (nondeferrable activities and occupations)—(5) men with children."

Looking up into the gathering dusk or the early dawn, residents of England's southeast coast no longer crane their necks in wonder as Allied bombers fill the sky on their way to blast Hitler's European fortress.

With deadly monotony, Allied bombers are making the run over the continent. With Germany's Ruhr smoking in ruins, RAF light and heavy bombers shifted the weight of their attacks to Berlin, and daring U. S. Flying Fortresses stabbed ever deeper into Europe to strike at the famous Messerschmitt aircraft plants near Vienna and Regensberg. Meanwhile the Germans claimed that North African ports are filled with Allied vessels concentrating for a full scale invasion of Italy or France.

With all Europe in a pother over the expected invasion, Prime Minister Winston Churchill of Great Britain told the world that when the Allies open a second front, it will be only after military circumstances dictate, and not for political purposes.

KINGS:
One Prisoner

Striking with characteristic swiftness, German troops moved in force into Denmark and made that model Nazi protectorate a military province.

King Christian

Reportedly interned in Copenhagen was King Christian X. Under arrest was former Premier Eric Scavenius and members of his cabinet. Throughout the entire tiny state martial law was in force, with public assemblages forbidden, a curfew imposed, and all judicial and civil functions in the hands of Nazis.

Apparent cause for Hitler's sudden decision to take over Denmark was the recent wave of sabotage imperilling production and communication.

Possible cause for the move was Hitler's desire to seal off the most direct route to Berlin from the North sea.

One Dead

Tough, wily King Boris of Bulgaria died with his boots off. At 49, the Balkan monarch reportedly succumbed of heart trouble in his royal suite, after three brazen attempts on his life during his 25-year reign. Once, a bomb missed him; another time, a bullet grazed his mustache but killed his chauffeur, and then two days after that, an explosion rocked the cathedral in which the king was worshipping, killing 125 and injuring 200.

King Boris

As an ally of Germany in the present war, Boris had played his cards shrewdly. Through Hitler's graces, Bulgaria had taken over parts of western and northern Greece, and chunks of Jugoslavia and Rumania.

Upon Boris' death, his six-year-old son, Simeon, was proclaimed king and a group organized to govern for him.

RUSSIA:
Still Rolling

One hundred and eighty miles to their rear the lazy Dnieper river wound, and to its banks German troops were prepared to fall back for a last ditch defense against the rolling attack of the Russians.

Having pushed forward north of the Azov seaport of Taganrog, the Russians threatened Nazi troops entrenched in the area. Facing encirclement from the rear, the Germans picked up their stakes and pulled out of the district, even as horse-mounted Cossack cavalry and mechanized units were knifing from the northwestward.

On the Kharkov front, Russian troops bore down on the Germans' last main railroad line running through the northern Donetz basin. Near Smolensk, the Reds plowed through for short gains.

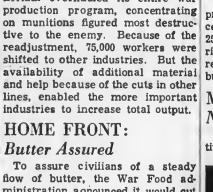
GENERALS:
Marshall Stays

GENERALS: Gen. George C. Marshall will continue as chief of staff of the U. S. army, although his four-year term has expired, President Roosevelt announced. General Marshall is first chief of staff to be granted an extension during war time, and the second in history, the first being General MacArthur, whose term was prolonged, now commanding in the South Pacific, in 1933.

PRODUCTION:
Up in U. S.

Backing up its fighting men on the world's fronts, America's production army gave the wheel an extra nudge with its shoulder to show an increase in output for July.

As the "arsenal of democracy," America's production of war materials for July was almost five times as great as November, 1941. But while production in ships, artillery, motor vehicles and food and clothing, etc., has apparently reached its peak, output of airplanes, army ammunition and signal equipment must be speeded up to meet 1943 goals.



U. S. artillery production steady

According to War Production Board Chairman Donald Nelson, airplane manufacture has failed to reach its highest level because of changes in design and labor shortages. In aluminum and magnesium, production problems have been overcome, Nelson said, and efforts are being made to discover additional uses for magnesium.

Britain Keeps Pace

Keeping step with its Big Brother Sam, Great Britain increased munitions output in the second quarter of 1943 by 25 per cent over that for the same period last year.

Although change in designs of British aircraft resulted in temporary slowdowns, production of planes by weight rose 44 per cent in 1943 over last year. Further expansion of the industry in the next 12 months is planned.

British Spitfire output up

At the start of the year, Great Britain overhauled its entire war production program, concentrating on munitions figured most destructive to the enemy. Because of the readjustment, 75,000 workers were shifted to other industries. But the availability of additional material and help because of the cuts in other lines, enabled the more important industries to increase total output.

HOME FRONT:
Butter Assured

To assure civilians of a steady flow of butter, the War Food administration announced it would cut its government purchases by 10 per cent in September and cancel them altogether in October.

Under the WFA program, civilians have been allotted 80 per cent of the estimated butter supply for the fiscal year ending next June 30. In order to obtain its 20 per cent of the total without seriously disrupting civilian stocks, the WFA buys heavily during periods of high production, then lowers its sights with seasonal drops.

Hits Rent Fixing

Stating that the OPA's action in designating the entire United States as a defense area in order to establish rent ceilings was never intended by congress or empowered by the Constitution, Federal Judge Bascom S. Deaver of Georgia declared the rental provisions of the price control act of 1942 unconstitutional.

In announcing his decision, Judge Deaver remarked that various government bureaus were seeking to impose rule of regulation in place of one of law, in contradiction of the principles of the Constitution. Although the judge said rent control was desirable in time of war, he argued the right of fixing prices was a duty of congress.

POPULATION:
States Show Loss

Seven midwestern states have lost 8 per cent of their population up to May of this year, through migration to war factory centers and enlistment in the armed services, the National Industrial Conference board reports. For the nation as a whole, the net loss to the civilian population, resulting from growth of the army and navy, has been 2.4 per cent from April, 1940, to May, 1943, it was said.

Super-Gas

For years, triptane has stood on the shelves of laboratories. Known as the most powerful hydrocarbon for use in internal combustion engines, it could only be produced through a classical method costing from $40 to $3,000 per gallon.

But working in conjunction with a staff headed by Dr. Gustav Egloff, an old officer of the Russian imperial army, Vladimir Ipatieff, and his 28-year-old pupil, Vladimir Haensel, have discovered a method for producing triptane at less than $1 a gallon.

According to Dr. Egloff, the new gasoline will increase the speed and range of American war planes 25 per cent, and boost their climbing power 20 per cent. Such performance would give the U. S. planes equal maneuverability with Jap Zeros, without sacrificing their heavier armor and gun placement.

Dr. Gustav Egloff

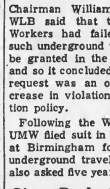
PACIFIC:
Closer and Closer

The great factor of air power loomed larger in the Pacific battle zone, with Japanese strongholds in the southwest reeling under concentrated U. S. bombing, and heavy raids predicted on the enemy's homeland from bases acquired in the Aleutian islands.

With Allied and Japanese soldiers locked in close jungle fighting before Salamaua, New Guinea, American bombers roared 350 miles northward to hammer the enemy's air base at Weewak. Since August 17, more than 300 Japanese planes have been destroyed there, thus giving the Allies' front line soldiers relief from air sttack and assuring the maximum operation of their supply lines.

Returning from a visit to the Aleutians, Lieut. Gen. John L. DeWitt of the western defense command, said that U. S. planes were closer to Japan now than Maj. Gen. James Doolittle and his fliers were when they took off from the Flat-top Hornet. General DeWitt envisioned heavy bombing flights from Aleutian bases over the enemy's homeland, with the planes flying onward to come down on Chinese airdromes.

PRICE CONTROL:
Over the Border



During the 3½ years in which Canada has been in the war, the country's cost of living has increased 17 per cent, in comparison with 28 per cent in the U. S. and 28 per cent in Great Britain.

Up to March 31, 63 per cent of Canada's war expenditure was paid off with taxes. Borrowings from banks amounted to 16 per cent. The rest of the money to pay for the war was raised through the sale of securities to the public.

By December, 1941, the wholesale price of farm products rose 28 per cent, while retail food costs jumped 25 per cent. To check a further rise, subsidies were paid producers, resulting in the maintenance of milk, butter and cheese output.

MINERS:
No Extra Pay

Because the miners are not entitled to pay for underground travel time under the fair labor standards act until the work week exceeds 40 hours, the War Labor board rejected their plea for such pay at $1.25 daily. The miners now work 35 hours.

William H. Davis

In the majority opinion written by Chairman William H. Davis, the WLB said that the United Mine Workers had failed to show why such underground travel pay should be granted in the face of the law, and so it concluded that the miners' request was an outright wage increase in violation of the stabilization policy.

Following the WLB's action, the UMW filed suit in the federal court at Birmingham for 2 hours daily underground travel time pay. They also asked five years such back pay.

Given Probation

In the first verdict under the Smith-Connally anti-strike law, 27 miners, charged with striking at government operated pits, were given suspended sentences of six months and put on three years probation.

WACS:
Recruiting Lags

Enlistments in the WAC (Women's Army corps) have been declining, statistics reveal. Only 3,005 women joined in June, 2,415 in July, and 1,720 in the first three weeks of August. Also, a large percentage of the 65,000 members of the WAAC, (Women's Auxiliary Army corps) are choosing to withdraw from service rather than to be sworn into the Women's Army corps.

FURY IN THE AIR

U. S. air operations out of England are now by far the most extensive and toughest operations of the U. S. air forces. Fliers who have seen action in four theaters—China, the Pacific, North Africa, and Europe—say the first three are child's play compared with the current flak-and-fighter opposition of Germans.

The first flight a year ago was made without the loss of a single U. S. plane. The Germans were caught off guard by the daylight raid. But such things don't happen any more. It is no secret that U. S. losses on each raid over the continent are high enough to hurt badly, though not high enough to stop the operations.

War correspondents in Britain declare that U. S. airmen who fly these missions are the greatest heroes of the war. They have to face more fighting fury, and face it with more skill, than any other men in this war—whether fighting on land, sea or in the air.

PARATROOP MIRACLE

There was one thrilling bit of untold history regarding the Allied landing in Sicily which only now can be revealed. A division of U. S. parachute troops actually stopped about two Nazi divisions which were dashing to the seacoast to await Allied landing barges.

This occurred the night before the landing barges arrived. Had the paratroopers not succeeded in holding up the Nazis, U. S. troops might have landed literally in blood.

What happened was that the paratroopers, coming down mysteriously at night, not far from the Nazi divisions, fooled the enemy into thinking he was outnumbered. Actually, a paratroop division is far inferior in numbers to a division of ground troops. But the Nazis could not tell in the dark how many Americans there were, got the impression that the sky was packed with psratroopers.

So they decided to camp for the night and get ready for a fight the next morning. But by daylight U. S. landing barges were safely ashore.

LUDWIG'S WARNING

Emil Ludwig, famous German author and biographer, recently had a unique session with the army's school for military government at Charlottesville, Va., as to what the Allies should do with Germany after the war.

Ludwig gave a series of lectures on how to prevent another Hitler from arising and plunging the world into another war 20 years hence.

Based upon years of studying Bismarck, Hindenburg and the Kaiser, the German historian urged that there be a strong army of occupation by all the United Nations for at least five years.

"The German people should know for the first time in 130 years," he said, "what a foreign authority looks like. Only thus can they be brought to understand that they have been defeated."

Ludwig pointed out that German militarism always had come from Prussia, while Germany's culture had come from the south and west. Therefore he proposed splitting Germany up into two states: (1) Prussia, small and isolated; and (2) Bavaria, Saxony, and the smaller Catholic German states which are not militaristic and which would be joined with Austria. This would put the Catholics in one country and the Lutheran Prussians in another.

No 'Poor Misguided' Germans.

"Leave to the Germans all that other nations have," Ludwig recommended, "but take away their weapons, supervise their education, and give them political guardianship. If you do not, and if you speak of the 'poor misguided German people,' then 20 years from now your sons will be fighting another war against them.

"What I fear," continued Ludwig, "is that on the day after the death of Hitler, the Junkers, the generals will kowtow to you and say, 'We love Americans. Come, let us be brothers again.' I fear that some of you will say, 'Now let us make peace. They are good people, these generals.'

"But they are not. They are not one whit better than the Hitlers. They merely have better manners," Ludwig declared.

Note: Ludwig paid tribute privately to the excellent job the army was doing at its school for military government. He said he had seldom met such an intelligent, progressive group of men, with such a grasp on the world's future problems.

History Written at Quebec; Only Time Will Reveal It

Military Experts Satisfied With Results of Roosevelt-Churchill Conference; Political Angle an Enigma.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

Mr. Baukhage has written today's column from Quebec, site of the Roosevelt-Churchill conference, which he covered for newspapers affiliated with Western Newspaper Union.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

Now that some of the deep secrets which surrounded the most important conference so far held by the firm of Roosevelt & Churchill, purveyors of victory, are beginning to be revealed in action, one can lean back, gaze at this remarkable adventure in history in the making—and wonder . . .

I cannot help recalling the evening of Sunday, August 22, nearly a month after the actual preparations for the conference began, the purpose of which was then unguessed even by the people whose job was to do the spade work. I was sitting with Edgar Mowrer, the well-known newspaper man, Michael Barkway, representative of the British Broadcasting company, and Wilson Woodside, commentator for the Canadian Broadcasting system. That morning the news had broken that Ambassador Litvinov would not return to Washington. It was learned that a virtually unknown member of the Soviet diplomatic corps, who had been their representative in Ottawa, was to replace the adroit Mr. Maisky, Stalin's expert lieutenant in London.

Woodside had learned, quite by accident, that a little while before the representative of Tass, the official Russian news agency, who had been an active participator in the press conferences, had suddenly departed from our midst—severing the last shadowy link with the Kremlin.

A few days before, just as a rumor was circulating that the conference had agreed upon the division of Germany into separate states as one of the post-war steps, the text of a broadcast from Moscow was printed in an American paper. It was made by the so-called Free Germany committee, and of course could not have voiced any views contrary to the will of Stalin. It urged that the German army be kept intact after the war!

Stalin's Absence

Of course Stalin's absence from the conference had been widely discussed in Quebec. To say the least we were four very confused members of press and radio, and I think our feelings were typical—two of us had covered international conferences before. Was Russia running a campaign show for the one staged on the heights of America's Gibraltar? The shudder we shuddered and which spread out over the telegraph lines and airwaves bounced back to the walls of the Citadel where the top-men were conferring. At an eight o'clock conference that eve-evening presidential secretary Stephen Early announced that the recall of Litvinov had been known to the conferees long before it happened and had no influence or effect on the conference.

Meanwhile all sorts of speculation about the effect of the absence of the Russians, the ominous "empty chair," had been pouring out of Quebec, perhaps comforting if not aiding the enemy and probably making no one happy, even Stalin.

Could this and the other unfortunate things which were written have been avoided; were we, in spite of ourselves, evil muses?

I said to one of the willing but rather futile and frustrated men who were supposed to provide us with facts: if we could have just had a little guidance wouldn't it have been better?

He admitted that was true, but, he added, "When an information man aska the higher ups for information they are so afraid they will say more than they ought to that we get nothing."

More than 200 press, radio and newa photographers were here. We filled to bursting the little old Clarendon hotel, with its narrow corridors, its lobby turned into a telegraph office, and its modest bedrooms made into press room and broadcasting studios. Two blocks away was the spacious Chateau Frontenac, a Normandie palace with 750 bedrooms, where some 300 military and technical experts were immolated. Canadian Mounted police, tough British marines and hefty Canadian veterans of Dieppe guarded its portals. The inmates, like us, were virtually incommunicado. When they dared take a one-day's river trip one officer said, "it was to prevent an outbreak of claustrophobia."

Invisible Ink

There is much we did not know when we arrived. There is more we still do not know of what occurred after the conferees met. History was written but it was written in invisible ink.

Now some things can be told. In the first place the event was, perhaps purposely, perhaps unwittingly, played down in Washington in advance. Before I left the capital I was assured the conference would probably end about the Wednesday a week before it did. I had hoped for a quiet half-week's vacation. But no sooner had I arrived on the Sunday preceding Roosevelt's arrival the next Tuesday, than I saw we were all wrong. I felt sure something had happened when the President and the prime minister had their preliminary talk at Hyde Park. Something did, for I am sure there had been no intention of producing the parade of cabinet officers and other brass hats who kept dropping in from the skies and elsewhere one after another. But I learned that the length of the conference was planned to a "t" by the President long before it began. He knew it would last precisely as long as it did for he timed his Ottawa trip in advance so he would be back in Washington on August 26. He knew what was coming and that is why he slipped off for that fishing trip, which was just that and nothing more, ahead of the conference—it was a health measure pure and simple. Churchill and his midnight cigars are something to prepare for, the wee ams' hours are the big moments for this human dynamo.

Then the "something" yet to be revealed, happened. Churchill hailed his foreign minister from London and with him came not only Information Minister Bracken, who played no part as an informer but nevertheless was of cabinet rank, but also the permanent head of the British foreign office, Sir Alexander Cadogan with the accent on the "dog" pronounced (though Secretary Early could never quite master it) "dug."

Of course Hull had to appear to match Eden; then another cabinet member, Secretary of War Stimson to match Bracken and then Secretary of the Navy Knox for good measure, perhaps to give verisimilitude to the talk that the Pacific was not being neglected. Then just before Stalin made public his gesture of withdrawal (recalling Litvinov), T. V. Soong, Chinese foreign minister more or less permanently installed in Washington for some time past, appeared. Then there was the excuse that a big drive on Burma was in the wind.

The Big Drive

Meanwhile the press had blown very hot and then very cold on an immediate invasion of Europe from Britain. I don't know whether the reports that the big smash was coming was a part of the Allied war of nerves, but I am sure that the folks who threw cold water on it were sincere in their belief it just couldn't be started before spring.

I sat with a general whom I have known for a long time, a real soldier in World War I as well as in this one. Here's what he had to say:

"We haven't got the men yet. We must drop bombs upon bombs. There is a lot more softening up to do."

This man was on the periphery—not on the inside. I am sure that the technical experts, the officers—and we had them all, probably the greatest aggregation of military brains and real experience, too, ever assembled anywhere — they were sure. They were certain. And when the conference was over they were satisfied. As to the political side, that is an enigma and will be one as long as Russia remains one. And that she is.

THE GARDEN

Winter Vegetable Shortage

By John S. Gardner, Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics

Unless he is prevented by lack of space, no good gardner stops with providing the summer table with vegetables, but his endeavor is also to have a surplus to use through the winter. Part of this surplus is canned or dried, but for those vegetables that can be fresh-kept, suitable storage is provided, to make the food-production program complete.

The vegetables that admit of storage are potatoes, cabbage, the root crops, sweet potatoes and the squashes. The two last named are the "warm" crops; the rest, the "cool" crops. Each group needs its own specific storage conditions, but not difficult to provide. Although special structures do the better job, really simple improvisations behave excellently.

This is the first of 4 articles, to describe storage ways and means, from the most simple to the quite "professional."

At the outset, it should be emphasized that the vegetables should be fit as they go into storage; they should be good food. Weather-beaten beets and carrots from the first planting should be stored only in emergency. Better, would have been to make plantings specifically for storing; carrots in late May and beets in July.

Potatoes, too, are an example. The late crop presents no difficulty as it is moved directly from the field into storage, but the spring crop needs special care throughout the summer, to make it keep nicely in winter storage.

So often, these potatoes are covered so shallowly as to be at the mercy of the summer sun's heat, and the soil's temperature may reach easily 100 degrees. The result is that the tuber rush through their "rest period", to start sprouting and taking on an off-flavor. Worse, the potatoes that the sunlight reaches become "strong" and unfit to use unless the outside layers are cut away. Potatoes are this year too precious to risk that loss.

The best storage temperature for potatoes is 60 degrees, and the best way to handle them is to dig them when the tops have died and get them promptly into a house basement or an "outside cellar." These structures should be kept closed tight during the day, but opened through the night so they can absorb coolness. Even a barn stall or the northest corner of a barn will do, the potatoes covered well with sacking or carpet by day, but uncovered at nite.

If the potatoes are to pass the summer where they grow, soil should be plowed to the row to assure a cover of from 6 to 8 inches. At the depth, the temperature can be held at about 70 degrees. The plowded-out middles, by the way, provide underdrainage for the tubers, to reduce the danger of their rotting.

County Given Wheat Goal of 1640 Acres.

The Boone County USDA War Board have been asked to see that the 1944 wheat acreage is increased. Boone County has been given a wheat goal of 1640 acres. It is believed that this goal can be reached by farmers and still follow good farm management practices. It is not thought necessary to plow land for wheat in any area where such practice was not a normal one.

The goal would be exceeded if all acreage of row crops was seeded with wheat for grain, the wheat also serving as a cover crop and as a nurse crop for legumes and grasses.

The goal for Kentucky is 455,000 acres and 68,000,000 acres for the Nation.

"That's OUR railroad, Tommy!"

A tiny lad on tip-toe flattens his nose against the window-pane, watching a passenger train speed by.

"That's our railroad, Tommy!" grandmother explains.

Yes, to grandmothers and kids...to farmers and business men...to all the people who live in the Southern Railway's territory . . . the Southern is "our railroad."

And how right they are...for the Southern is their railroad. Their railroad . . . and yours!

It brings you the clothes you wear and the food you eat. It hauls the fuel and lumber and brick that warm and shelter you.

It serves your mines and mills and industries . . . your forests and farms...your villages and your bustling, growing cities and towns.

It shares your pride in the Southland's progress; your dreams of a better, a greater South. And it works with you, in countless ways, to help make those dreams come true.

Today, your railroad has gone to war. Day and night, the men and women of the Southern are moving fighting freight and fighting men . . . keeping the wheels rolling under the heaviest transportation load in history.

Tomorrow, when final Victory has been won, the busy trains of your railroad will serve the growing transportation needs of the South . . . just as efficiently, dependably, economically as they are now serving the transportation needs of a nation at war.

Then, more than ever, you'll be proud to say of the Southern—"That's our railroad!"

WPL Would Save All Containers.

That there may be enough containers to handle next year's crops, the War Food Administration is asking that crates, boxes, baskets, bags and sacks be saved by producers, dealers and handlers. Large quantities of boxes and crates are being used to ship materials abroad, and production of cantainers has been curtailed by the war. A shortage of containers for next year's vegetable, fruit and other production may result, unless care is taken to preserve the sacks, bags, hampers, boxes and crates not in use.

Up Your Savings

There will be American justice for the savages of Tokio but our trial and punishment of Tojo and his criminals will cost blood, sweat, toil and tears and money. You can supply the money by upping your war bond buying through the payroll savings plan. Figure it out yourself and see where the money is coming from. How much does it cost you and your family to live each month? How much money is coming in from all members of your family? Put the extra money into war bonds, every penny of it. From where I sit....

by Joe Marsh

Grandma Hoskins knows a lot about history—but when we asked her where the first brewery was built in America, she wouldn't take sides.

"You see," says Grandma, "wherever the colonists settled, one of the first things they thought about was food and beer ... In fact, one reason why the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock was because the Mayflower was runnin' short of beer."

Well, that was a new one on us, but Grandma showed it to us —just as it was written in the Mayflower's log.

And it seems that all through our early American history beer sort of tempered the hardships and helped to make us a tolerant, moderate people.

From where I sit, beer is the American drink of moderation and friendliness—kind of a symbol of our personal liberty.

Cold Storage Locker Plant Proposed

To serve the rural community of Boone, Kenton, Gallatin and Grant counties in the vicinity of Walton.

Applications are being received this week whereby signers may reserve space when it is ready for use. There will be 300 lockers available if the application for this plant is approved by the War Production Board but it is necessary that 60% of the capacity be signed up and one year's rental be paid in advance before application for construction of such a plant will be considered by the W. P. B. There appears in this issue of The Advertiser an application form which may be used to apply for locker space. It is imperative that applications be filled in and be in hands of Dixie State Bank, Walton, Kentucky by the end of this week if we are to have much chance of priority being granted by the government for construction of such a project in this neighborhood.

Other sections of the country particulary in the South and West have had plants of this type in operation for the past several years and we feel that this section of Kentucky will be greatly benefited by the existence of such a convenience for the preservation of food

This project is locally financed and will be owned and operated by a group of Boone County business men. The latest report on the progress of the above mentioned plant was that the idea was meeting with widespread approval and that all the lockers would be sold in the very near future. There is no space available in Winchester, Paris, Stanford, Danville, Frankfort, Versailles and other Kentucky towns that have such locker plants in operation. All of the lockers are rented and a waiting list is filled up for space when available. We beleive it would be a sad mistake if the people of the four counties should pass up this opportunity to have a cold storage plant through failure to sign sufficient number of applications soon enough. Further information concerning this project may be had by calling Walton Lumber Company, Community Public Service Company or County Agents in any of the above four counties.

If interested in such a project do not fail to fill in application and send to Walton Locker Plant not later than Saturday, Sept 18.

Red Cross Nurse Report:

Many visits to hospitals, doctors and homes of school children were made during August, getting as many defects looked after as possible before schoolopened: also much time was spent trying to find persons, particularly children who needed X-ray and could come to the clinic.

It is planned to try to have immunization clinics in all schools during September. If there is enough interest a class in Home Nursing will be taught at Walton High School, beginning right away.

32 Business Men Serve Volunteer Farm Labor Group

Thirty-two business men served the past three months in the Burlington Volunteer Farm Labor Group according to Rev. Will Smith, County Farm Labor Assistant.

These men have helped thirteen farmers encountering emergencies in the growing and harvesting of their crops. These men have made a total of 153 men working on jobs ranging from chopping out corn to harvesting hay, cutting and housing tobacco.

The members of the volunteer group who enlisted on the orginal program which was set up to charge 50 cents per hour have served in every instance without pay working only to assist in the nation's food and fiber production program and with a desire to help worthy farmers in need. The work of this group is reported one of the outstanding examples of farmer-businessman cooperation in the state.

Members who served in the Burlington Volunteer includes: Elmer Kirkpatrick, C. D. Benson, C. L. Cropper, Walter Brown, A. E. Stephens, Luther Smith, R. I. Rouse, J. T. Williams, Ty Combs, A. B. Renaker, J. G. Smith, H. R. Forkner, O. D. Perkinson, N. Sullivan, L. C. Weaver, John Crigler, Courtney Kelly, G. S. Kelly, W. A. Weaver, Joe Huey, Less McBee, Carl Cason, Frank Maurer, E. J. Crutcher, Sherman Burcham, Willard Ryle, Charles Dolph, Alvin Clore, Elza Poston, John J. Maurer, and John Zellers.

There is a possibility that the name of someone who has worked in the above group has been overlooked. If this is reported their names will be added to the above list.

The most surprising experience of the above program has been the skill, stamina and ability that many of the above former farm boys displayed when taken out of a store, bank or office and put in the field.

Thomas Franklin Campbell

Thomas Franklin Campbell of Petersburg passed away at his home late Sunday following a brief illness.

Mr. Campbell was employed by the State Highway Department and was a member of Petersburg Baptist Church.

Funeral services were conducted from Petersburg Church Tuesday at 2:30 with burial in Petersburg Cemetery.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Emma E. Campbell; four daughters, Mrs. George Bowman, Mrs. Donald Mathews, Mrs. Porter Huey, and Miss Clara Campbell all of Petersburg; two sons, Sgt. Jerome M. Campbell, Camp Swift, Texas and Marvin Gene Campbell, Petersburg, and one grandson.

Chambers & Grubbs were in charge of funeral arrangements.

Livestock Notes Timely Important

The following timely livestock notes prepared by the college and the county agent's office are presented for farmers consideration.

Beef Cattle

The disposal of light grass cattle presents a difficult problem. The problem is whether to sell with grass finish or to grain feed for better finish or to winter and finish next year. The feed and equipment on hand rather than purchasing feed should be the deciding factor.

Sheep

Parasite control is a major problem. A parasite control letter will be mailed from the county agent's office this coming week. Those sheepmen who do not get this letter should notify the office.

Hogs

Hogging down corn saves labor. Fencing areas of the field with electric fence or 26 inch woven wire fence can be made at very slight expense. One hundred shoates or larger do a better job of hogging down corn.

Early sown cover crops gives twice the feed per day of labor as does hay crops and four times the feed for the same amount of labor spent on producing corn. Save labor—Seed early cover crops of wheat, rye, vetch or barley.

First Fall Meeting of Walton Woman's Literary Club Held.

Mrs. Wendell W. Rouse entertained Wednesday afternon, September 8th, in her home on Bedinger Avenue for the opening fall meeting of the Walton Woman's Literary Club with the new president, Mrs. C. F. Blankenbaker, in the chair.

Following the business session, an excellent program was presented. The spiritual thought for the day was given by Mrs. C. J. Alford, with an appropriate selection based on Philippians 4:11, "For I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."

Local Farmers Urged To Secure Tenants Early

Farmers, whether landlords or tenants, should trade at the earliest possible date for the next year's cropping season according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. The sooner such trades are completed the better the plans for next year's crop and livestock production.

Prospects for next year include a more serious shortage of labor, propably some more machinery, fewer head of livestock, greater production of feed crops.

There is no substitute for clear thinking and careful planning by each individual farmer unless the farm operations are balanced and balanced in relation to labor, machinery, feed production, pasture and livestock unprofitable operations may result. These factors under present war conditions make plans for next year doubly important now.

There are many farm jobs bearing on next year's production that should be done now and in many cases in accord and understanding with next year's tenants and landlords.

Mr. Bruce Franks has been selected as a teacher in the Walton-Verona High School.

X-ray Clinic To Be Held At Florence Methodist Church Sept. 21, Beginning At 9 A. M.

Doctors who have made a study of Tuberculosis agree that the chest X-ray is indispensable in the diagnosis of Tuberculosis.

If we could find ways and means to X-ray every member of every family in which there has been a death from Tuberculosis within the last five years and X-ray every member of a household in which there is a case of tuberculosis now, much could be done to prevent new cases. This should also include frequent visitors to a Tuberculos patent..

If you think you need an X-ray, see your doctor, if he advises come to The X-ray Clinic at the Florence Methodist Church, Sept. 21st. Teachers will please come between one and two in the afternoon—all others between nine and eleven in the morning.

Walton Homemakers

The Walton Homemakers held the first meeting of the club year 1934-44 on Friday, September 10 at the home of Mrs. Ora Stone. with the new president, Mrs. H. F. Mann presiding. The morning session was given over to business and to a preview of the year's work. Group singing under the leadership of Mrs. Wendell Rouse opened the afternoon session. An interesting program followed, directed by Mrs. Leo Flynn, program conductor for the year.

As the leader of the major project, "Bringing the Fall Wardrobe up to Date" we were happy to have our own beloved Mary Hood Gillaspie, whose presence among us was the occasion of much joy. After the lesson, which was full of information and suggestions, club members "modeled" out-of-date costumes, the whole club taking part in the discussion as to ways of effective remodeling. Much interest and enthusiasm was manifested and the spirit of this opening meeting augurs a most successful year for the Walton Homemakers.

The cannery was built under the direction of the Kenton Co. Board of Education and is located behind the Simon Kenton High School. Miss Helen R. Gardiner, extreme right, home economics teacher at Simon Kenton is supervising the procedure.

Many families in Kenton County will have little use for their ration stamps this winter, if the number of canned fruits, vegetables, and meats processed at the Kenton County Cannery is a creterion. Since the cannery opened the middle of July, over 18,000 cans of fruits, vegetables, and meats have been processed.

The equipment for the cannery was made possible by the State Department of Vocational Education, and the boiler which furnishes steam for the canning was donated by the Kenton County Fiscal Court. The cannery is equipped with sinks for washing

See Here, Private Hargrove!

by Marion Hargrove

W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: Private Marion Hargrove, former newspaper feature editor has been inducted into the army and has spent some time in training at Fort Bragg. In his advocation of prospective selectees, Private Hargrove had advocated a pre-induction period of "painting the town red." Once in the army he thinks "an open mind" is the best policy for the "first three weeks are the hardest." Some of the more fundamental phases of army life have gone over Private Hargrove's head and his conduct has landed him often on KP duty. He has been classified as a cook. Between his KP duty and his regular cook assignment he has spent considerable time in the kitchen.

CHAPTER VII

One of the nicest things about working in the kitchen in Battery C of the 13th Battalion has been the knowledge that its number-one chow hound, Buster Charnley, would drop around after supper and the conversational fat. It's like a letter from home to listen to Buster's slow and mournful drawl, and his refreshingly dry humor is a pick-me-up at the end of a long, hot afternoon.

Buster came prancing up the chow line, the other evening with a grin that started at the back of his head and enveloped his face from the nose down.

"What's eating you, Walter," I asked him, "—besides that egg-sucking grin?"

"Leaving here, boy!" he sang. "You won't see me around for three months. And when you see me, son, you'll see stripes on my sleeves and a look of prosperity on my clean-cut Tarheel face!"

The man behind him wanted to get to the mashed potatoes, so Buster had to move on down the line, I got the whole story from one of the kaypees while I waited for him to make his evening call.

Of the 200-odd men in Battery C, two men had been selected for three months' training at Fort Sill, Oklahoma. At the end of their three months, they will come back as gunnery instructors, with a non-commissioned officer's rating and a specialist's extra pay on top of that. Mrs. Walter Charnley's little boy Buster was one of the two men selected.

One of the sergeants near here came back from a recent leave with one of the most glorious shiners that ever darkened the human eye.

"Run into a door?" I asked him.

"Gave a guy the wrong answer," he replied simply, "or rather, the answer he didn't want."

I looked at his face; his teeth were all there and his jaw was still in one piece. I looked at his hands; the knuckles showed the marks of service.

"I was at a party," he went on, "when this fellow who lives next door to my folks wants to know 'how's the morale in the Army?'

"Leaving here, boy," he sang; "You won't see me around for three months. Then I'll be wearing stripes on my sleeves."

'Excellent,' I tell him; 'excellent!' He looks me up and down sort of pitying-like and wants to know don't I read the magazine stories about how poor it is. Well, I tell him, 'I spend all my time with the boys and I believe what I see more than what I read.'

"He goes on from there making cracks at the Army and the country and the suckers we are for giving our time for what's not worth fighting for in the first place. I listen politely for a while, because even though I'm not in uniform I don't want to look rowdy. I stand as much as I can and then I ask him to his feet. It isn't long before his three brothers join the fight. It was one of the brothers put his finger ring in my eye."

"Brother," I told him, "that ain't a black eye. That's a badge."

"I lost the fight," he said.

"You won the argument, though," I told him.

"I'd like to use the sergeant's name, but he made me promise not to."

"I told the Old Man," he said, "that I got the shiner playing baseball."

"How can I fit you into a coat," moaned Supply Sergeant Israel, "with you fidgeting around like a race horse at the post? Stand still, dern you, stand still!"

"Heavens to Betsy, Thomas," I complained, "you're getting to be the fussiest old maid in the outfit. I'm not squirming!"

"In the first place, my man," he said, "don't call me Thomas or try to get overly familiar with your elders and betters. In the second place, don't argue with me. In the third place, don't fidget in the first place. And in the fourth place, don't agitate me unnecessarily. I'm at the end of my patience with you and I ain't feeling in no holiday spirit anyway."

I buttoned the handsome winter blouse and he stepped back to inspect it with the eye of an artist. "Every time my wife gets one of me, she has her picture taken to send to me. The picture I got today showed she's going to eat my heart out unmercifully when I can't put off my furlough any longer and I have to go home. And with domestic difficulties on my hands, I have to fit your winter uniforms."

He yanked at my coattail, straightened the collar and scratched his head. "Hargrove—37 long," he yelled to the boy at the desk.

"Man that is born of woman," I comforted him, "is of many days and full of trouble."

"Git off the platform and into this overcoat," he sighed. He held the coat while I got into it and he slapped my hand for fidgeting again. "Sometimes I wonder why I go to so much trouble keeping you boys dressed right. Here I spend the whole afternoon wiping sweat out of my eyebrows, just to see that your clothes fit you and you won't look like a bunch of bums—which you are.

"Do you know what some ungrateful kitchen termite said the other day? He started putting it around that the Army could double itself in half an hour by filling up the extra space in its trousers. Do your trousers fit you bum?" He straightened the pleats in the back of the overcoat and gave the tail an unnecessarily vicious yank.

"Did I say they didn't?" I groaned, raising my arms despairingly. "Just because somebody else says you stretch the coat in the back so the man will think it fits right in the front, you have to go picking on me!"

"Me pick on you?" he screamed. "It's a wonder my nerves ain't completely shot! Do I come around and put signs on the door saying, 'Walk Up One Flight and Save Five Dollars'? Do I throw gunny sacks on your bed and ask you to take up the cuffs two inches?

"With my thankless job, it's a wonder I haven't collapsed before this. I wish I was a permanent kitchen police instead of a supply sergeant. Hargrove — 37 long! NEXT!"

"This battery is my baby," Corporal Henry Ussery said, loosening his belt for a real bull session. I've watched it grow from thutty-one men to what it is now. It was hard work building up this battery to what it is now, but it's worth it when you look around and see what you've done."

The assembly sighed en masse and decided to loosen its belts. Ussery was wound up again.

"When I got here, there wasn't anybody here but the instructors. We spent four weeks eating dust and running rabbits. There I was—I'd spent thutteen months learning the old drill and tactics to where I reckon I had it down better than any man in the whole Army. Then they started this 'minute Army,' with a bunch of green ignorant Yankees—and I had to teach them what they had to know!"

The bull session nodded wisely and Corporal Ussery went on. "Now, this young Corporal Joe Gantt, for instance. Now, this Corporal Gantt, when he first came in, was one of the greenest rookies in the bunch. But he snapped out of it and made corporal in four months."

"Was that soldiering," a voice broke in, "or handshaking—as the Latins used to say, mittus flopus?"

"Much as I can't stand Gantt, I'll have to admit it was soldiering. That's the way it is. You sweat your head off hammering the drills and the calisthenics and the military courtesy and guard duty and the physical bygiene and the manual of arms into them. They're all clumsy and awkward as a bear in an egg crate at first, but then you can see them, after a while, snapping into it and getting better and better. By the time we've had them thutteen weeks, and they're ready to be assigned to their posts, they're as keen and alert as a bunch of West Point cadets. They're extra good cooks and better soldiers."

"Isn't a good soldier a specialist at griping and growling?" somebody asked him.

"Griping is an art, just like goldbricking is an art. Before you leave here, you learn that you don't enjoy griping a bit when you spread your energy all over everywhere, griping about everything. You learn to choose one thing and specialize in griping about that.

"If you want to be a specialist at griping, you have to get on your toes. You get to where your clothes are comfortable. Where you used to think the food was terrible, now you pretend that you don't get enough of it. You like the beds and by nine o'clock you're sleepy. So you have to find something special to gripe about. If you haven't got any originality at all, pick you out one special noncom and gripe about him.

"Now, you take Private Hargrove, for instance. First came here, he griped about me telling him he was carrying his rifle wrong. Now he gripes when I tell him he's carrying it right. He might have something there. He still carries it like it was a 75-millimeter gun. He's getting so shiftless, even at griping, that he can't find anything to beef about except not getting any mail. I'm going to write all his creditors, so he won't even be able to gripe about the mail."

Somewhere on the wild coast of South Carolina, the battalion in which I cook is being treated to a weekend to combine business with pleasure. We can romp in the Atlantic while we get a "taste of the field." With the wind blowing the sand into kitchens and pup tents alike, it will be nice to get back to

At night we sleep, or simulate sleep, in pup tents made by our own hands with loving care.

Fort Bragg for a taste of the food we eat. A vexed soldier here doesn't grate his teeth. He crunches them.

We made the trip here in lorries, which are the mechanical age's nearest approach in appearance to covered wagons. You've probably seen them rolling noisily but smoothly through town—large canvas-topped trucks with a folding bench down each side inside. You'd expect to be hauled out of one of them, beaten to death, at the end of a 130-mile trip. They give a tolerably bumpy ride, just tolerably.

When we started pitching camp, about a quarter of a mile back from the beach, we found the place already inhabited — by cannibals. These creatures, which masquerade as harmless flies and even camouflaged by the harmless sounding name of sand flies, must have vampire blood back in the line somewhere.

I don't bear any grudge against the easygoing, good-natured house fly—in fact, I feel rather cruel when I squash one for tickling me—but it arouses my pioneer fighting spirit to see a stunted horsefly light on my bare leg, make himself sassily comfortable and start draining off my life's blood. But what can you do? Slapping one only serves to make him mad at you.

At night we sleep, or at least we simulate sleep, in pup tents made by our own hands with loving care, blood, sweat, tears, two pieces of waterproof cloth, two lengths of rope, and a handful of turned lumber.

I share my little duplex with Private Warren, the new student cook who told me the story about the man at the boarding house. When I stumbled home last night, primed to the gills with a blend of sand and salt water, I discovered that we had an overnight guest! The chief cook on our shift, in the task of packing the field kitchen, had neglected to put his own field pack (tent half, blankets, etc.) on the truck, so he decided to drop over and have us put him up for the night.

A pup tent, as you probably don't need to be told, will accommodate two men, provided neither of them works in his sleep. If three men are to sleep in one tent, at least two of them must be midgets or babes in arms. Cooks should never sleep two to a tent, because of their tendency toward plumpness.

We arranged ourselves in the tent by wrapping knees around the tent poles, putting all feet outside for the night and raising one side of the tent high enough to make a rustic sleeping porch of the whole affair.

The guest proved to be one of those loathsome creatures who pull all the covers to their side of the bed. We had quite a lot of trouble with him, since he slept in the middle and rolled up in both our blankets. We remedied this by waiting until he started snoring, then recovered our blankets, rolling ourselves in them and throwing a raincoat over him.

The three-man arrangement was very uncomfortable for a while. When I finished opening my eyes by scooping the sand from them, I found that I had rolled through the opened side of the tent and spent the night under a myrtle bush ten yards down the slope.

During my first off hour, I succeeded in getting a tan which must have darkened the very marrow of my bones. My chest, back, and legs looked the color of a faded danger flag and smelled like the roast pork that the cook forgot to watch. After that, the surf and the sun went their ways and I went mine.

SUN AND HEAT STROKES

Two emergencies that come with hot weather are sunstroke and heatstroke. Whether the individual is working or at rest the sun may cause dizziness, headache, dryness of the skin, and difficulty in breathing. Suddenly the patient falls, convulsions occur, and sometimes he is apparently completely paralyzed. There is flushing of the face, delirium, nausea, vomiting, a coated tongue, and high temperature—skin hot and red.

This condition is called sunstroke or thermic fever. The patient is placed in a shady spot and ice or cold water is applied continuously to the surface of the whole body. Ice pack if available is placed behind ears and about the head.

However, what is called heat exhaustion is now more often seen than sunstroke. Heat exhaustion usually occurs where the individual is working hard amid great heat in a place where the ventilation is poor. There is a feeling of great weakness and the first thing noticed is that there is no perspiration on the skin which is very hot and dry, temperature below normal and pulse feeble.

In heatstroke the patient should be disrobed to the underwear and placed on his back in some cool shady place. Ice bags are applied to the head and both armpits. The use of hand fans (or towels) to stir up air currents is advisable. When the patient recovers consciousness he should be given increasing quantities of cold water by mouth and a quarter teaspoon of table salt with each glass of water.

In what is called heat exhaustion, which is a mild form of heatstroke, the body temperature instead of being high, as in heatstroke, may be below normal. Skin is pale and clammy and moist, breathing rapid and shallow. Treatment consists in placing patient in a cool place and giving him cool drinks of fruit juices and a quarter teaspoonful (15 grains) of table salt every three hours.

Getting the patient to a cool spot and giving cool drinks and table salt (to keep water in the body tissues) is the main thought in the treatment of heat stroke and heat exhaustion. It is the great loss of water and salt from the body tissues that brings on the symptoms.

Allergies Grouped Into Three Classes

Hay fever is a form of allergy—being sensitive to certain substances.

A simple definition of allergy is given by Dr. H. K. Detweiler, Toronto, in the Bulletin of the Academy of Medicine, Toronto. "Allergy is a condition of some individuals in which certain tissues react in an 'altered' manner in the presence of specific substances (usually protein in nature) which, to the ordinary individual, are without effect."

Dr. Detweiler states that there are three main or major types of allergy or over-sensitiveness. These are (1) atopic allergy, (2) bacterial allergy, (3) contact allergy. Examples of atopic allergy are hay fever, pollen asthma, or asthma due to sensitiveness to protein of foods, furs, feathers, dander of animals, or various substances such as house dust, orris root, linseed.

Examples of bacterial allergy are tuberculin-sensitive individuals and patients suffering from asthma caused by sinusitis, bronchitis, and other infections.

Examples of contact allergy are skin inflammations due to contact with plants, chemicals and metals.

What about heredity as a cause of allergy? The atopic type if not really hereditary shows a definite tendency to follow the laws of heredity; bacterial allergy has not been definitely established as being of a hereditary nature; contact allergy is not hereditary.

What about treatment? Is the injection of pollen vaccine effective in preventing hay fever? Does avoiding using or small doses of the foods causing allergy prevent asthma or other allergic symptoms? Can asthmatic attacks be prevented by "desensitizing" these individuals with extracts of house dust, animal and other substances?

The great majority of these patients can obtain relief if they are patient enough to submit to the various tests necessary.

THE SIN OF MOSES AND AARON

LESSON TEXT—Numbers 20:1-13, 27, 28.

GOLDEN TEXT—Be ye angry, and sin not.—Ephesians 4:26.

Sin is a serious matter, and even though men in our day may not call it by its real name, it is as much here as it was in the days of Moses—and it is just as awfully sinful as ever.

Sin is universal; it appears not only among the people, but also among their leaders. God's dealing with it is on the basis of "greater privilege, greater responsibility." No leader, especially in God's cause, can expect special consideration of his weakness. He must meet God and answer for his sin.

I. The Unbelief of the People (vv. 1-5).

It is well to bear in mind that the people of Israel who were now at Kadesh-Barnea, on the borderland of Canaan, had been here once before—40 years before. Here they had rebelled against God in unbelief because of the report of the spies concerning the land. Because of their unwillingness to take God at His word, they had been sent to wander 40 years in the wilderness until the complainers had died. Read that graphic and instructive story in Numbers 13 and 14.

Now they were back at Kadesh—and a new generation shows that the spirit of unbelief and distrust has a hold on humanity, and makes son like father.

They had run short of water. The spring which had served their fathers on the previous visit to Kadesh had run dry.

One would have supposed that all the mighty dealings of God in their deliverances over and over again, would have indicated the need of faith; but they had only a wailing criticism of God and His leaders.

II. The Answer—God's Power (vv. 6-8).

Moses and Aaron, now old men but still God's chosen leaders, took their sorrow to Him (v. 6). It was the right place to go, for power belongeth unto the Lord (Ps. 62:11).

Instead of punishing the people for their unbelief, God calls upon His servant Moses to show them that He (God) is able. At a word from Moses, the rock would bring forth water before their eyes.

Is not that the perfect answer to all man's questioning and lack of faith—the revelation of the omnipotence of God?

But God's purpose is defeated (at least in a measure) by the

III. Unbelief of the Leaders (vv. 9-11).

Instead of taking their place as the servants and subordinates of God, Moses and Aaron claimed that they would provide water (v. 10). Instead of showing God's power by speaking to the rock, and His mercy in providing for the people, they uttered a rebuke; and then, by smiting the rock, took to themselves the honor that really belonged to God.

When called upon to act for God, they acted for themselves, and in their own name. They used for their own glory the power delegated to them by God. Let us beware that we do not fall into the same error.

Let us also note that if the punishment seems severe, we should recall that they had broken a type of Christ. Christ was the Rock. He was to be smitten at Calvary, that the water of life might flow forth. But He died once for sin (1 Cor. 10:4) and is not to be smitten again. We need now only speak to Him in faith and receive life.

In Exodus 17:5, 6, Moses smote the rock, presenting the first half of the type foreshadowing the work of Christ; now he was to speak to it, fulfilling the type, and in unbelief he destroyed God's picture or type of redemption. It was a grievous sin.

IV. The Answer—Judgment (vv. 12, 13, 27, 28).

Moses and Aaron were not to be permitted to enter the promised land, because of their failure. No doubt it was true that their departure to be with the Lord was in a sense "far better" for them; and yet it cannot be denied that there was disappointment in not seeing the conclusion of their long and arduous labors.

The lesson is clear. We may serve God long and faithfully, but that is not any excuse for "letting down" in our closing years. We dare not presume, as though our intimate touch with God and place of leadership gave us an "inside track," a right to take it easy, spiritually or morally.

Sin is always sin; and it is especially grievous in one who has the privilege of high position and of power with God.

God buried His workmen; but His work went on. For Aaron there was his son Eleazar (v. 28). For Moses there was a Joshua, "full of the spirit of wisdom" (Deut. 34:9). It is always so. None of us is indispensable.

If you were to say the first bugle call of the day in the Army is "Reveille"—you'd be wrong. It's "First Call." But you probably know what cigarette gets first call with Army men—it's Camel. And Camel is the favorite with men in all branches of the service—Navy, Marines, Coast Guard, too. (Based on actual sales records from service men's stores.) And though there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. S., and to men in the Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard wherever they are. —Adv.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

There are about 400 kinds of trees and vines in the world that contain rubber latex, but Hevea brasiliensis, native of Brazil, is recognized as the best for commercial purposes.

Don't keep your car idle too long with the tires carrying the load. Drive it a short distance periodically. This flexes the tires and will prevent deterioration.

The Army is conserving rubber. It is estimated that by 1944 crude rubber requirements per vehicle will be cut 63 per cent as compared to the amount of rubber needed by the vehicle at the outbreak of the war.

CHATTERER GROWS TOO CURIOUS

EVERYBODY knows how curious Peter Rabbit is. But as for Chatterer, while he might be curious about a thing he saw for the first time, he had too much sense to meddle with it until he knew all about it. So Chatterer had come to be thought very smart, quite too smart to be caught in a trap—at least, to be caught in an ordinary trap.

Now, many people manage to make their neighbors think they are a great deal smarter than they really are, and Chatterer is one of this kind. If some of his neighbors could have peeped into Farmer Brown's corncrib the morning after Farmer Brown's boy found the telltale corncob so carelessly dropped by Chatterer they would have been surprised. They would have seen Chatterer the Red Squirrel showing quite as much curiosity as ever possessed Peter Rabbit.

Chatterer had come over to the corncrib as usual to get his daily supply of corn. Quite suddenly his sharp eyes spied something that they hadn't seen before. It was down on the floor of the corncrib quite near the door. Chatterer was sure that it hadn't been there the day before. It was a very queer-looking thing—very queer, indeed. And then he spied another queer-looking thing near it, only this was very much smaller. What could they be? He looked at them suspiciously. They looked harmless enough. They didn't move. He ran a few steps toward them and scolded, just as he scolds at anything new he finds out of doors. Still they didn't move. He ran around on a little ledge where he could look right down on the queer things. He was sure now that they were not alive. The biggest one he could see all through. Inside was something to eat. The littlest thing was round and flat, with funny bits of wire on top. It looked as if it was made of wood and in the sides were little round holes too small for him to put his head through.

What could they be?

"Leave them alone," said a small voice inside Chatterer.

"But I want to see what they are and find out all about them," said Chatterer.

"No good ever comes of meddling with things you don't know about," said the small voice.

"But they are such queer-looking things, and they're not alive. They can't hurt me," said Chatterer.

Nevertheless, he ran back to the pile of corn and tried to eat. Somehow he had lost his appetite. He couldn't take his eyes off those two queer things down on the floor.

"Better keep away," warned the small voice inside.

"It won't do any harm to have a closer look at them," said Chatterer.

So, once more he scrambled down from the pile of corn, and little by little drew nearer to the two queer things. The nearer he got the more harmless they looked. Finally he reached out and smelled of the smallest. Then he turned up his nose. "Smells of mice," muttered Chatterer, "just common barn mice." Then he reached out a paw and touched it. "Pooh!" said he, "it's nothing to be afraid of." Just then he touched one of the little wires and there was a sudden snap. It frightened Chatterer so that he scurried away. But he couldn't stay away. That snap was such a funny thing, and it hadn't done any harm. You see, he hadn't put his paw in at one of the little holes or it might have done some harm. Pretty soon he was back again, meddling with those little wires on top. Every once in a while there would be a snap and he would scamper away. It was very scary and great fun. By and by the thing wouldn't snap any more and then Chatterer grew tired of his queer plaything and began to wonder about the other queer thing. No harm had come from the first one, so he was sure no harm could come from the other.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength.

Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder are sometimes burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. Doan's have been winning new friends for more than forty years. They have a nation-wide reputation. Are recommended by grateful people the country over. Ask your neighbor!

COOKED A FINE DINNER; THEN THREW IT TO DOG

One lady recently stated that she used to throw her own dinner to the dog most of the time. It made her sick just to look at anything to eat. She was swollen with gas, full of bloat, had headaches, felt worn out and was badly constipated. Finally she got ERB-HELP and says she now eats everything in sight and digests it perfectly. Bowels are regular and normal. She is enjoying life once more and feels like "some other woman" since taking this New Compound.

ERB-HELP contains 12 Great Herbs; they cleanse bowels, clear gas from stomach, act on sluggish liver and kidneys. Miserable people soon feel different all over. So don't go on suffering! Get ERB-HELP! Jones Drug Store.

LETTER FOR NEW GUINEA

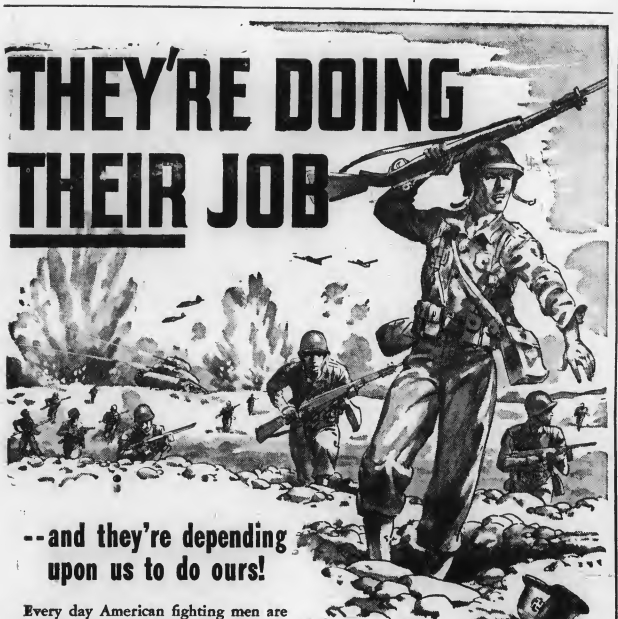
The following letter was received by "Brownie" Tanner from his brother who is stationed somewhere in New Guinea.

Dear Brother;

I will try and let you know that I am still going strong. This is a heck of a place here but we don't let that stop us, we keep right on pitching. As you probably know, it rains here most every day, one of the boys said we were having a drought, as it did not rain today, it is cloudy tonight so I suppose it will rain. The rain fall here is one hundred and twenty inchs a year, so it has to rain a lots to do that.

The mosquitoes here are rather large, here is an example as the story goes, a large one lit on a landing strip, the service boy's put a hundred and fifty gallons of gas in it and five gallons of oil before they noticed what it was—believe it are not, I doubt it. I wasn't there.

How is the family? Tell all hello for me and answer soon.



I'll be seeing you.

Italy's Unconditional Surrender Marks Real 'Beginning of the End' for Axis; GOP Outlines Foreign Relations Plank; Reds Recapture Ukraine Farm Lands

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)

ITALY SURRENDERS:
One Down, Two to Go

Five days after British and Canadian troops stormed across the Messina straits to land on the Italian mainland, Italy surrendered unconditionally to Gen. Dwight Eisenhower.

When Marshal Pietro Badoglio's government gave up, it marked the first split in the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo Axis. First indications of the Italian collapse came with the ouster of Benito Mussolini.

Left to hold Hitler's vaunted European fortress were German troops, themselves engaged in a major retreat in Russia, and the Nazis' smaller Balkan allies. While capitulation of Italy exposed central Europe to heavy bomber attack, the Alpine district presented a formidable obstacle to an Allied ground advance into southern Germany.

Hundreds of thousands of her troops killed or captured in North Africa; her elaborate railroad system torn to shreds; her fair cities smouldering in ruin, and lacking the natural resources to carry on war, Italy sought the easiest way out of the conflict.

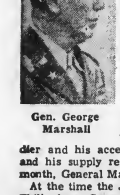
SOUTHWEST PACIFIC:
Isolate Japs

Australian troops were hacking their way through jungle brush to the northwest of Lae, New Guinea, when a cloud of American planes appeared overhead. The next moment the sky was filled with tiny white puffs, marking out Allied paratroopers floating to earth to assist in the encirclement of 20,000 Jap soldiers.

Gen. George Blamey

Previously, Australian units under Gen. George Blamey surprised the Japs by landing in force to the east of Lae. Moving quickly, they advanced on the big enemy base even while the Aussies and U. S. paratroopers were sealing off Lae to the northwest.

General MacArthur's trigger action not only cut off the Lae garrison from reinforcement from the north, but it also was designed to choke off stubborn Jap troops resisting an Allied advance before Salamaua, farther to the southeast.



HEALTH:
Holding Up Well

Civilians are maintaining a better level of health than federal authorities expected, despite food rationing, longer work hours, and fewer doctors and nurses available, the Office of War Information reports. While mortality and sickness rates are slightly higher, the statement comments that the rise is not more than could be anticipated, considering wartime strain.

The only serious epidemic condition is the increase in infantile paralysis (poliomyelitis) and spinal meningitis. More than 4,500 cases of infantile paralysis have been reported throughout the nation this year, the largest number since 1934. Spinal meningitis cases total 13,368, the greatest number since 1914, when records began.

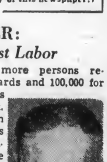
2,000,000 OVERSEAS:
Marshall Reports

Of 7,000,000 men in the army July 1, 2,000,000 were overseas, Gen. George C. Marshall, U. S. chief of staff, revealed in his biennial report to the nation.

Gen. George Marshall

Of the 7,000,000 men, General Marshall said, 521,000 are officers, with 1,065 generals. More than 2,000,000 men are serving in the air force.

Experience shows that six tons of shipping are necessary to transport a soldier and his accessories overseas, and his supply requires one ton a month, General Marshall said.



At the time the Japs attacked the Philippines, General Marshall stated, six troop ships and nine cargo vessels were en route to the islands.

WACS

Most of the officers of the Women's Army Auxiliary corps (WAACS) have taken the oath in the new Women's Army corps (WACS) the war department announces. Of 5,977 WAAC officers, 5,656 have transferred to the new organization without change of rank. Of the 319 women who have not been given the oath, 41 may yet join, but their cases are pending. The others have dropped out for failure to meet physical requirements or other reasons it was said.

MANPOWER:
Control Coast Labor

With 160,000 more persons required for shipyards and 100,000 for aircraft factories on the West coast, War Mobilization Director James F. Byrnes announced that the WMC received control of the supervision of labor in that area.

James F. Byrnes

A copy of a program already developed in the Buffalo, N. Y., area, the WMC's West coast plan involves: 1. Determination of necessary production schedules in various factories; 2. Shift of labor to essential employment from less essential work or services; 3. Allotment of manpower to the more important industries in the area; 4. Distribution of farm help wherever most needed throughout the West coast.

Time to Switch

Along with adoption of the West coast plan, the WMC's selective service bureau sought to co-ordinate its draft program with industrial needs.

First, the bureau ordered that all non-deferrable workers seeking to switch to essential production be given 30 days, or till October 15, in which to find such employment through registration with the U. S. Employment service. The WMC previously ruled that essential occupation, and not dependency, be the basis for draft deferment.

Second, the bureau instructed local boards that before they induct any workers skilled in 149 critical occupations, they must submit the names of such men to the U. S. Employment service. The service will then determine whether these men are more urgently needed by another employer.

GOP:
Keep Sovereignty

Co-operation in the preservation of peace without the loss of U. S. sovereignty constitutes the basis of the Republican party's post-war advisory committee's recommendation for future American foreign policy.

Harrison Spangler

Meeting on historic Mackinac Island, Mich., under National Chairman Harrison Spangler, the GOP committee struck the theme for its 1944 plank on foreign affairs.

While declaring that "we must do our full share in a program for permanent peace among nations," the GOP committee members said, "we must preserve and protect all our own national interests." If any proposed international co-operation should conflict with our best interests, the committee said, "then the United States should adhere to the policy which will preserve its constitutionalism as expressed in the Declaration of Independence . . ."

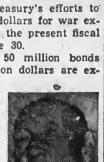
For conquered countries, the committee recommended disarmament and destruction of war industries.

RUSSIA:
Regaining Wealth

Under the weight of massed Red attacks, German troops slowly fell back to the broad banks of the Dnieper river in southern Russia.

With many of the rich coal and iron deposits of the Donetz basin in Russian hands again, advancing Red armies also reclaimed much of the fertile farm land of the Ukraine, famed for its black earth and wheat and cotton fields. Slicing into the heart of this province, the Reds severed the Nazis' main rail connections to the north.

With the natural resources, Russian troops also recovered many former industrial cities, like Kharkov. But having been wrecked by warfare and their manufacturing facilities demolished by the Germans, reconstruction will be necessary to restore them to production. In the north-central sector, Red troops pounded at the gateway into White Russia, adjacent to the former state of Poland.



MISCELLANY:

OCTANE GAS: High octane gasoline that will give motorists 50 to 70 miles to the gallon is predicted as a post-war development of the oil industries by William Carney, a research chemist for a large refining company. The new automobiles using this 90 to 95 octane gasoline will have smaller motors and lighter bodies, made of alloys or plastics, it is believed.

U. S. TREASURY:
Seeks Billions

High finance has come to the forefront with the treasury's efforts to raise 100 billion dollars for war expenditures during the present fiscal year ending June 30.

Approximately 50 million bonds valued at 15 billion dollars are expected to be sold during the treasury's present bond selling campaign. All of the money will be sought from individuals and businesses, with banks offered a limited number of securities after the close of the public drive. However, the treasury has been obtaining 100 million dollars weekly through short term bill sales to banks.

Rep. Robert Doughton

With congress reconvened, Representative Robert Doughton's house ways and means committee was looking forward to consideration of new tax legislation to raise an additional 12 billion dollars requested by President Roosevelt. Present levies will yield 38 billion dollars.

RAIL WRECKS:
High Toll

Crowded with passengers returning to New York, the Pennsylvania railroad's mighty Congressional Limited streaked through the North Philadelphia station. On it whizzed to Frankfort Junction, Pa. Then, a burned journal on the seventh car of the 16-car train gave, throwing the coach high into the air.

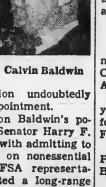
Hurtling against a steel girder of a signal tower, the upper section of the coach was sheared right off. Careening wildly, the car behind smashed into the wrecked coach, and the rest of the train left the rails and plowed along the right of way. Fire broke out in some of the cars. More than 50 dead and 125 injured were removed from the wreckage.

Several hours later, the New York Central's Century Limited was roaring along near Canastota, N. Y., when its locomotive exploded, derailing nine of the 15 passenger cars. The first four cars lunged down an embankment; the others were strewn all over the tracks. Heavy, steel rails were plowed up and twisted into fantastic shapes. Three crewmen were killed; approximately seven passengers injured.

U. S.-BRITAIN:
Tongue Common Bond

Speaking at Harvard university, Prime Minister Winston Churchill declared the United States and Great Britain must march together "in those realms of thought which are consecrated to the rights and dignity of man."

"It would be a most foolish and improvident act on the part of our two governments . . .to break up this smooth running and immensely powerful machinery the moment the war is over," Churchill added.



Commenting on studies being made by a special commission to construct a basic English language for use by all people, Churchill said such a common tongue offers far better opportunity for understanding between people than "taking away provinces and land or grinding them down in exploitation."

Stating that a common speech had drawn the United States and Great Britain close together in war, Churchill said that it may well prove the foundation for a common citizenship.

ECONOMIC DIRECTOR:
Appointed for Italy

Former assistant to Vice President Henry Wallace when he was secretary of agriculture, and more recently head of the Farm Security administration, 41-year-old Calvin B. Baldwin was named area director of economic operations in occupied Italy.

As area director, Baldwin will have the task of co-ordinating the various programs of supply and production instituted by the Allies' civil commissions in governing the captured territories. With Italy essentially an agricultural country, particularly in wheat and fruits, Baldwin's experience in farm administration undoubtedly determined his appointment.

Calvin Baldwin

Joining attacks on Baldwin's political philosophy, Senator Harry F. Byrd charged him with admitting to a joint committee on nonessential expenditure that FSA representatives had formulated a long-range plan of using the government's power of eminent domain for breaking up large land properties into smaller holdings.

JEFFERS

William M. Jeffers, director of the wartime rubber program, has resigned his office, stating that he believes that his main task is accomplished, and that he wishes to return to the railroad of which he is president.

About 30,000 tons of synthetic rubber will be turned out this month, in contrast to the 67,000 tons which is the goal of the program, Jeffers stated, explaining that difficulties have been encountered in expanding factory capacity.

BOMBING OF ROME

Pope Pius XII was completely cooperative with the Allies the first time Rome was bombed, but not the second time. Inside fact is that he called in Harold Tittman, American charge d'affaires to the Vatican, and protested in the strongest language. He gave Tittman a scorching scolding.

Reason for the Pope's ire was that on August 11, Tittman had informed him that Rome could be recognized as an open city by the unilateral declaration of Italy.

As a result, the Pope understood that Rome was an open city and apparently so informed Marshal Badoglio. The Pope was acting as intermediary for the Italian Government. Both he and Badoglio, therefore, apparently rested on Tittman's assurances and considered Rome an open city.

That was why the Pope was so indignant when, despite his earlier conversation with Tittman, Rome was bombed again.

Whether the State Department failed to communicate Tittman's message to General Eisenhower in order to head off the second bombing was something on which State Department officials declined to comment.

However, one explanation probably was that a city cannot be declared "open" by a unilateral declaration. Neutral observers must enter the city and definitely ascertain that troops, munitions works, airfields, and government offices have been removed.

This had not been done following Tittman's first conversation with the Pope, and that was why General Eisenhower bombed Rome again.

PRIORITY OF DANGER

Behind the closed doors of the OCD in Washington, plans for the civilian defense of the country are being revised. The new plans take into account the decreasing likelihood of attack, and the growing public indifference to black-outs and bomb shelters.

War chiefs insist the danger of attack has not passed, but they admit there is no point in whipping up the public to a frenzy of fear, especially in the safer areas.

They have now divided the country roughly into three zones, with the following "priority of danger"—1. Pacific Coast, 2. Atlantic Coast, 3. Interior areas.

The coastal areas are 200 miles deep, so that everything 200 miles inland is "interior" and relatively safe. The Pacific coast is regarded as more dangerous than the Atlantic, because the Japs are both uncontrolled and unpredictable.

When the revision is finally ironed out, public announcements will be made, and there will be a general relaxation of defense activities. But OCD will insist that the minimum measures of protection shall be ready for the siren.

Decision to relax the program was difficult for OCD, since it meant a scaling down of personnel, and a loss of jobs throughout the organization.

AIR FORCE DUPLICATION

Advocates of a single air force point to the manpower saving that might be accomplished, right under the noses of the Chiefs of Staff, if army air forces and naval aviation were combined.

On the edge of Washington, separated only by the Potomac river, are the army's Bowling Field and the navy's air base at Anacostia. Both fields are equipped with many of the same facilities, and those facilities are manned by forces which duplicate each other.

Each field has its own radio tower and radio staff; each has its separate communication staff, its own meteorological bureau and staff, its own medical staff, its own supply depot—and a dozen other services required at a big air field.

A single air force, combining both army and navy, would do away with this duplication both of equipment and personnel.

Canadian, U. S. Colleges Offer Plan for Prosperity

Two Schools Offer Prescription for Post-War Depression in Pamphlet Entitled 'The Midcontinent and the Peace.'

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

Out of the part of the world farthest from the fighting, literally and figuratively, has come an interesting international prescription for the cure of the world's post-war headache—the spell of depression that we have to be ready for.

The formula is summarized in a 43-page pamphlet that I wish everyone could read. The title is "The Midcontinent and the Peace." The cover is an earthy brown embellished with alternating rows of golden grain sheaves, fat porkers and trucks.

It is a report made jointly by the Universities of Minnesota and Manitoba. It has nothing to do with departments of state, it has no official status beyond the fact that the American and Canadian governors asked their respective state universities to do the job. It is a splendid down-to-brass-tacks example of the recognition of the common interests of two important areas lying on opposite sides of an international boundary line.

The gist of the report is this:

I. Western Europe must arrange greatly to increase its imports of wheat, lard and pork after the war.

II. Canada and the United States must reorganize their automobile-producing industries so that a maximum employment in Canadian factories can be maintained; cost of autos be reduced to Canadian buyers and American car output increased.

III. Agriculture in the prairie provinces of Canada and the central northwest United States must continue along the lines of agricultural specialization developed out of necessity during the war.

The Connection

Now, at first glance, the connection between these steps may not be evident, but the report makes the whole effort clear and also shows how the program can be carried out. There is nothing new or revolutionary in the methods discussed, nor in the reasoning governing their results, but a striking assemblage of data gathered and arranged in such a manner that it offers what appears to be a logical program of action.

In the first place, the report shows how domestic economic policies (the ones I briefly summarized in the three points above) are, in fact, international policies. It demonstrates with figures and explanation that "sound and strong internal economies in Canada and the United States" must have "resoundingly important effects on the external world."

Examples offered to prove this include the figures which show how the rise and fall of demand in Canada and the United States affected other parts of the world up to and after the depression hit us in 1929.

In less than three decades, imports in the United States of ten different commodities increased from 300 to 1,700 million dollars worth. Take silk: the yearly average importation of silk bought by the United States from 1901-05 amounted to 45 million dollars. In 1929, it had jumped to 432 million dollars. But when the depression struck, it fell to 114 million dollars in 1932.

The total imports of the ten commodities dropped from 1,718 million to 534 million dollars—and you can imagine what happened in the producing countries when these markets disappeared.

One interesting point brought out is that in this period of expanding trade (both import and export) in which Canada and the United States shared, the MUTUAL interests of the two countries greatly INCREASED and their competitive interests declined.

Industry Predominant

The report shows how agriculture has ceased to be our greatest source of wealth, how industry has become pre-eminent and to maintain our agriculture, a healthy condition of industry must be maintained. The old statement is quoted: "Tell me the amount of factory payrolls and I will tell you the price of meat and butter."

The plans for our own agriculture are fairly simple—maintenance of the same type of specialization now going on. The plan for Europe is more complicated but since the question of whether the people of western Europe eat at all for the next few years, depends largely on what Russia, the United States and the other grain producing countries do, these countries may be able to get western European countries to do what we want.

According to the Midcontinent planners, an arrangement should be made whereby western Europe for a period—perhaps 15 years—would absorb our surplus wheat, pork, lard and other farm products. Production of these products would be stopped in western Europe and resources saved would be put to efficient use. The producing countries would assist in reorganizing European agriculture to this changeover. The producing countries would also agree to reduce certain tariffs so that the Europeans can pay for the agricultural products they absorb with goods they can make. (Of course, there is the tough spot.)

As for changeovers in agriculture, it is pointed out that they are not new. Minnesota was once the greatest wheat producing state in the country. That is no longer true. "Mixed farming" has greatly increased. Diversified farming rose in Denmark and improved the standard of her people—these changes come about automatically because the new type introduced pays better. Similar changes, it is implied, could be brought about by ukase, too.

Unfortunately, space does not permit a detailed review of this report but quite as important as its actual content are the forces which initiated it—in the first place. It brings to our consciousness the mutual interests of this country and our northern neighbor which are plain to any American familiar with Canada and her people but which many in both countries ignore. Again, it shows how groups in two separate countries can get together and work out steps mutually beneficial and likewise advantageous to the whole world. The most important thing of all, however, is the emphasis on the fact that domestic problems are frequently international problems.

Diary of a Broadcaster

Let me tell you of another crazy rumor story that I heard today. It is so old that it has whiskers but people up and down this land are listening and believing it.

A reliable, otherwise hardheaded man told me that an acquaintance of his wife had a friend or relative who had a letter from her boy, a prisoner in Japan. The boy said that he was being well treated and then made a reference to his stamp collection.

He had none, so the remark got the people to thinking—they repeated it "then the FBI or somebody" took the letter, steamed off the stamp, and under it was written—

Well, before the man finished telling it, I said: "I know what was under it—They've cut my tongue out."

How did I guess? Well, I heard that story a dozen times in the last World war.

But to make sure, I made a few inquiries, simply to check the procedure. In the first place, prisoners of war don't use stamps. They can't write direct to their next of kin. The messages all are relayed through the International Red Cross anyhow.

Before we got into the last war, I was sitting on top of a Fifth avenue bus in New York, reading an article by David Lawrence, which reported how the department of justice had run down a story to the effect that sweaters knitted for the Red Cross were sold to soldiers. The bus stopped—a Liberty Bond orator was making a speech—I listened. He was telling the same story that the department of justice had run down and found it had absolutely NO basis whatever.

Remember this before you repeat these charming fantasies. Enlistment in the WACS, as fine a corps of American women as were ever gathered together, has been slowed down by a cheap and dirty story made out of whole cloth and passed from one drooling lascivious mouth to another.

BRIEFS . . . by Baukhage

Bombers that will dwarf in size our present Flying Fortresses, armed with heavy caliber cannon of an entirely new principle of operation and capable of carrying half a carload of bombs across the Atlantic and returning non-stop, are some of the revolutionary aircraft developments predicted for the near future by Gen. H. H. Arnold of the U. S. army air forces.

"By the hundreds of thousands, boys and girls who in other times would have completed high school, are now leaving the school before graduation to go to work," says the Educational Policies commission of the National Education association.

'Dry Ice' Gun

When liquefied, dry ice produces such a violently expanding gas that it is now used as a propelling force in a "dry-ice gun," says Collier's. A cylinder under the barrel is filled with crushed ice which soon melts and gives off gas.

A measured amount of this gas enters the firing chamber when the trigger is pulled and propels .22-caliber bullets with a terrific force, one load of the ice being sufficient for 1,000 shots.

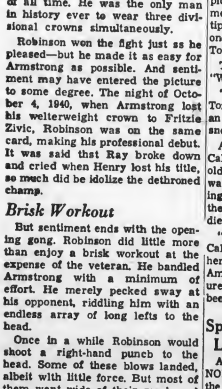
SPEAKING OF SPORTS



by Bob McShane

Released by Western Newspaper Union.

PRACTICALLY no fight in ring history drew such unanimous condemnation as the recent Ray Robinson-Henry Armstrong set-to in Madison Square Garden.

The once-great Armstrong didn't have a thing. Most observers agreed that the match was a travesty on sport. The clients who paid $16.50 for a ringside seat figured the fight wasn't worth even the admittance taxes. The boys who paid $2.50 for seats were just as loud in expressing their disapproval.

It was a sad evening for many fight followers who had seen "Hammerin' Henry" in his prime. In our opinion, Armstrong was one of the greatest fighters, pound for pound, of all time. He was the only man in history ever to wear three divisional crowns simultaneously.

Robinson won the fight just as he pleased—but he made it as easy for Armstrong as possible. And sentiment may have entered the picture to some degree. The night of October 4, 1940, when Armstrong lost his welterweight crown to Fritzie Zivic, Robinson was on the same card, making his professional debut. It was said that Ray broke down and cried when Henry lost his title, so much did he idolize the dethroned champ.

Brisk Workout

But sentiment ends with the opening gong. Robinson did little more than enjoy a brisk workout at the expense of the veteran. He handled Armstrong with a minimum of effort. He merely pecked away at his opponent, riddling him with an endless array of long lefts to the head.

Once in a while Robinson would shoot a right-hand punch to the head. Some of these blows landed, albeit with little force. But most of them went wide of their mark and by such margins that several critics were moved to observe that Ray was of no mind to punish the ex-champion unduly.

The New York press was rather bitter about the match. One commentator noted that ". . . we must exercise restraint and report that the thing was a priceless stinker, priced at $16.50 ringside and $2.50 for the cheap seats. The boys on the roof were robbed. Even if they got in on a pass." Another writer expressed the opinion that Robinson was a lovable character to let Henry stay.

Immediately after the fight Henry announced his plans for retirement. This wasn't a particularly startling pronouncement because Henry has said over and over again that he would retire. But like Sarah Bernhardt, he repeatedly postponed the day. He would bang up his gloves one day, then change his mind the next.

Changed Plans

To show that he was in the groove, Henry followed up his retirement announcement with word that he had reconsidered his decision to depart forever from the game. He said that he had decided to go through with his scheduled 10-round match with Slugger White of Baltimore.

Sam Lampe, White's manager, failed to agree. "I positively will not let White fight a blind man, and that is just what Armstrong is," Lampe declared. "Furthermore, I don't believe a boxing commission in the country would pass Henry as fit for the ring."

This time, though, Henry had some sort of a reason for reversing his decision. Joe Lynch, promoter of the Armstrong-White fight, threatened court action against Armstrong when he made public his plans to quit the game.

It might be more fitting if the paying customers would start court action against Lynch if he attempted to force the fight down their throats

Wind Blows Grave Deed 150 Miles, Kills Owner

FORT PAYNE, ALA.—The day after Hackleburg, Ala., was hit by a tornado, James Long found a deed to a Hackleburg cemetery lot in his field.

An investigation revealed it had been issued to A. H. Powell, postmaster, shortly before the storm hit. Powell and his wife were killed by the twister.

Granddad Finds His Tony—a Yank

Happy Reunion an Incident Of Sicily Invasion.

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS IN NORTH AFRICA.—The old man's eyes were dark and pleading.

He had taken off his straw hat and was standing on the white-hot street of Palermo in front of a building guarded by a tall American soldier. He spoke rapidly in Italian. Then he stopped and his eyes anxiously searched the soldier's face. The soldier shook his head.

"No compree, Pop," he said.

From the inside of the building a voice bellowed: "What's going on out there?"

"There's an old guy trying to tell me something, but I can't savvy what he wants," the guard said. "He's a nice old guy, too."

Other voices heavy with sleep murmured "can the gab."

The guard looked at the old man again. The old man's eyes were glistening but hopeful. The soldier whispered, "you wait a second, Pop —stay right here—I got an idea."

He slipped inside the doorway and picking his way between the rows of men stretched on the stone floor he tiptoed over to the corner. He shook one of the sleeping men. "Hey Tony," he whispered.

The soldier's eyes opened. "What's up? What's happening?"

"Can you come outside a second, Tony?" the guard asked. "There's an old guy that wants something and you can speak this lingo."

A few minutes later Private Tony Calato of San Francisco was in the old man's arms and the old man was crying and laughing and kissing the soldier on both cheeks while the bewildered guard and other soldiers watched with amazement.

"He's my granddad," said Private Calato. "My dad was born over here, and so when Gramp saw the American army in Palermo he figured I'd surely be along and he's been hunting for me."

Sprains Knee Landing; Learns Bombs Had Stuck

ALLIED HEADQUARTERS IN NORTH AFRICA.—The fliers and the ground crew crowded around Second Lieut. Jig Buster Jr. of Selma, Ala., lifted him gently and said:

"Tough luck, Jig. That really is a tough break."

Jig had just landed his Boston bomber on Pantelleria island after a bombing raid on Trapani. He had to make a belly landing because the bomber's hydraulic system had been damaged by German fighters.

He made the landing safely and started to climb out of the cockpit, when he fell and sprained his knee badly.

"It's a bum break, Jig," his mates said as they carried him sway.

And then they came back and looked at his damaged ship. Their eyes popped and their jaws dropped.

A full load of bombs was still in the bomb bays and the doors were slightly open.

Jig Buster had not realized that the deadly "eggs" hadn't dropped. He knew the ship had been hit by anti-aircraft fire over the target, but he thought the bombs had gone. He had blissfully come back with his hydraulic system damaged to make a belly landing.

With enough explosives banging beneath the ship to blow everything near by to little pieces, he had belly-landed the Boston.

When his "buddies" went back to tell Jig Buster the news, they forgot about his sprained knee. They said only:

"Who said you bad tough luck?"

Just Anything to Make Conversation, the Idea

BOISE, IDAHO.—Taxi Driver Isabelle Guthrie, hauling a sergeant and his wife, commented: "Judging from the labels on your bags, you've traveled quite a bit."

"Yes," said Master Sergt. J. T. Hopson. "I've just come back from India."

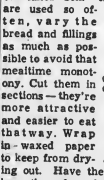
"That's where my husband is," the driver said.

"Say, I'll bet you're Jim Guthrie's wife," cried Hopson. "He's shown me pictures of you."

Judge Should Stick to Judging, Not Chemistry

STANTON, NEB.—The telephone jangled in the office of District Judge Fay Pollock. He picked up the receiver and listened—for a long time. Then he replaced it on the hook, gently. The court reporter looked at him expectantly. "It seems that Mrs. Pollock is most unhappy," the judge explained. "I reactivated the water softener last night. It appears I didn't use salt—but 20 pounds of canning sugar."

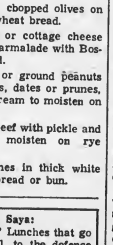
HOUSEHOLD MEMOS... by Lynn Chambers



Put Nutrition in That Lunch Box
(See Recipes Below)

Let's Pack a Lunch

Do you realize as your children once again begin the trek back to school with their lunch boxes that those mid-day meals should carry a third of the day's calories in them?



Lunches that are a bite-and-run excuse for a meal will not give children or workers nourishment from which they are to draw the pep and energy, vim and vigor they need to do their best day's work. Their loads are heavier to carry these days than ever before, and it behooves every homemaker to be on her toes to put in the box the very best lunch she can pack.

Packing the lunch need not take undue time or effort. Assemble the equipment needed for packing a lunch at one convenient spot, and then you can get right to work with it as soon as you've put breakfast on the table. Keep staples on hand to simplify the lunch-making problem. This should include such things as crackers and cookies, cheese, milk, eggs, peanut butter, beans, salmon, sardines, dried fruits, nuts, jelly, marmalade, pickles and olives.

Whenever possible prepare a dish for the family that can be utilized in the lunch in some way. If you make a meat or fish loaf, this can be used as a sandwich filling.

Sandwiches are the mainstay of the lunch box. However, as they are used so often, vary the bread and fillings as much as possible to avoid that mealtime monotony. Cut them in sections—they're more attractive and easier to eat that way. Wrap in waxed paper to keep from drying out. Have the fillings moist to keep them from being unappetizing and spread the bread with butter, margarine or mayonnaise to keep it moist, fresh and tasty.

Sandwich Fillings.

Chopped bard-cooked egg, pickle or celery, mayonnaise on oatmeal bread.

Cream cheese, chopped olives on white or whole wheat bread.

Cream cheese or cottage cheese with jelly and marmalade with Boston Brown bread.

Peanut butter or ground peanuts with chopped figs, dates or prunes, mayonnaise or cream to moisten on white bread.

Ground dried beef with pickle and mayonnaise to moisten on rye bread.

Meat or sardines in thick white sauce on white bread or bun.

Lynn Says:

Going Places? Lunches that go places to school, to the defense plant or office should be just as attractive as you can make 'em. A box is better than a bag, as it will hold the food without having it get mussed.

Keep lunch boxes clean and air out. If the box has an enamel finish it can be washed out with soap and water. Any box can be aired out between lunches, kept free from crumbs.

Use waxed paper to keep sandwiches fresh and moist, vegetables crisp and fresh. A vacuum bottle will keep beverages hot or cold, soups steaming hot. Easy-to-pack crackers with soup furnish energy—give a real homey touch to the lunch.

Try surprises often in the lunch box just for morale's sake. A piece of favorite gum, candy or a few nuts, an orange, sectioned and peeled and peeling fitted over orange to give the appearance of being peeled but to keep it fresh and moist do loads to give the school child or worker a lift.

Lunch Box Menu

Cream of Tomato Soup
Crackers
Ham Salad on Whole Wheat Bread
Chopped Egg Salad on White Bread
Carrot Strips
Fresh Apple Cookies

Ground ham and carrots with sour cream dressing on buttered rye bread.

Cooked liver or liver sausage, mashed or ground fine with fried onion, minced, chili sauce on whole wheat, rye or pumpernickel bread.

Ground veal, carrot and celery moistened with mayonnaise.

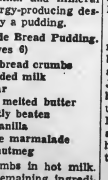
Chopped carrots, raisins, and nuts, moistened with mayonnaise, on white or oatmeal bread.

Oatmeal Bread.
(Makes 2 large loaves)

2 cups oatmeal, uncooked
½ cup molasses
1 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon shortening
1 cup boiling water
1 cup milk
1 cake yeast dissolved in ½ cup lukewarm water
5 cups flour

Measure oatmeal, molasses, salt and shortening into bowl. Add boiling water and let stand 1 hour. Beat in milk, dissolved yeast and flour. Let rise until doubled in bulk. Knead well. Turn into greased bread pans, let rise again until double in bulk. Bake 15 minutes at 425 degrees, then 45 minutes at 375 degrees.

Boston Brown Bread
(Makes 2 small loaves)



1 cup graham flour
1 cup rye flour
1 cup cornmeal
1½ teaspoons soda
1½ teaspoons salt
1 cup sour milk or buttermilk
1 cup water
¾ cup molasses
1 cup floured raisins

Sift together the dry ingredients. Add bran remaining in sifter to dry ingredients. Combine sour milk, water and molasses. Make a well in the dry ingredients, pour in liquid and mix as quickly as possible. Add raisins with last few sweeps of mixing spoon. Fill greased molds ⅔ full, cover closely and steam for 2 hours.

Milk Drinks.

Vary the lunch box beverage as often as possible, serving milk; hot chocolate or cocoa. For a change of menu, try an old favorite which contains iron—molasses milk drink, made by mixing 1 quart of milk with 2 or 3 tablespoons molasses and a dash of nutmeg.

Spiced milk: To 6 cups heated milk, add ½ teaspoon cinnamon, dash of nutmeg or mace and stir vigorously. Add sugar, if desired, and serve hot or cold as preferred.

Fruits make wonderful desserts and add a generous portion of the day's vitamin and mineral health. If an energy-producing dessert is desired, try a pudding.

Orange Marmalade Bread Pudding.
(Serves 6)

1½ cups dry bread crumbs
1½ cups scalded milk
1½ cups sugar
1 tablespoon melted butter
2 eggs, slightly beaten
1 teaspoon vanilla.
½ cup orange marmalade
½ teaspoon nutmeg

Soak bread crumbs in hot milk. When cool, add remaining ingredients in order given. Place in a buttered baking dish and set in a pan of hot water. Bake in a moderate (350-degree) oven for 45 to 50 minutes, or until knife inserted in center comes out clean. Serve with lemon sauce or cream.

WHILE making "Sahara" for Columbia, Bruce Bennett met a marine who'll have to be referred to merely as Joe, the marine. Joe was on leave after some tough Guadalcanal fighting, and due soon to return to the South Pacific. The actor told Joe about a Guatemalan machete he'd collected when he was making a Tarzan serial about ten years ago. "That's a little something I'd like to have," said Joe, so Bennett sent it to him. Last week a V-Mail note from Joe said: "My machete is the pride of the outfit. I spent two solid weeks sharpening it. And brother, I ain't out to cut hay!" Bennett wishes he'd had dozens of them to hand over.

Metro is certainly rounding up the popular band leaders; they recently signed Guy Lombardo and his Royal Canadians for a musical, and already have Tommy Dorsey, Harry James, Xavier Cugat, Bob Crosby, Vaughn Monroe and Spike Jones.

Watch for a radio quiz master to name three of Hollywood's loveliest who have not played opposite Cary Grant. It would be hard to name one. Laraine Day shares honors with him in "Mr. Lucky," and is the latest of a list of 28 of his heroines. Irene Dunne, Katharine Hepburn and Sylvia Sidney have appeared three times apiece in Grant pictures, and he's probably our only ranking star who has both Joan and Constance Bennett on his roster of "Celebrities I Have Made Love to on the Screen."

The cast of "Mr. District Attorney" made money when they won a wager from the "Ellery Queen" performers. Jay Jostyn of the former show was a guest star on the latter, and his colleagues bet the opposition that he'd solve the mystery.

Just a natural—The soldiers stationed at Camp Ellis, near Lewiston, Ill., were trying to find just the right girl to name "Miss Camp Ellis," and wound up by selecting Anita Ellis, songstress of the Jack Carson show on CBS.

Every now and then Hi Brown, producer and director of "The Adventures of Nero Wolfe," runs into an old-timer in radio who reminds him of his first program on the air. It was called "High-Brow Readings by Hi Brown," and he'd rather forget it.

Three years ago an aspiring young actor named Curtis Rudolf failed to obtain a bit part in a little theater production in Cleveland, and was advised to try some other line of work. Recently Metro staged a first showing on "Salute to the Marines" in Cleveland, and an actor named Donald Curtis, christened Curtis Rudolf, had a leading role in the Wallace Beery starrer.

A prop man on "The Fallen Sparrow" set laboriously made "snow" by flaking ice into a freezing bin—and returned from lunch to find that John Garfield and Walter Slezak had returned from their lunch and used it all up throwing snowballs at Maureen O'Hara and Director Richard Wallace. When they learned how much labor had been involved, they pitched in and made more.

ODDS AND ENDS.—The small black microphone into which folks on the Bing Crosby program sing has been named "Skinny Ennis" . . . Bob Hawk, of "Thanks to the Yanks," has an idea for a movie quiz in which several studios are interested . . . Fred Astaire's signed a long-term contract with Metro, where he made his first picture—"Dancing Lady," which started Joan Crawford and Clark Gable, in a cast including Franchot Tone, and made little of Astaire's talents . . . Dickie Jones, the air's new "Henry Aldrich," went to Hollywood several years ago as a protege of Hoot Gibson—he was the voice of "Pinocchio" in the picture of that name.

ON THE HOME FRONT

with RUTH WYETH SPEARS

NO MATTER if you move from hither to yon or change from a spacious house to a single room there are certain treasures that will mean home to you. A few books, a piece of china and some perfectly useless but cheering bits of bric-a-brac—by all means take them with you and make a dramatic setting for them.

A shadow box cupboard will do the trick. The one shown here is light and substantial; will lend glamour even to dime store odds and ends, and may be placed on top of a table, a chest of drawers or a desk. No special skill and almost no tools are needed to make it.

If you do not have a saw to cut the scalloped frame, mark it on plywood and take it to the nearest woodworking shop to have it cut. You may have the straight boards cut at the lumber yard where you buy them. All you will have to do is screw them together; tack on the front frame and paint or stain to suit your room color scheme.

From where I sit ...

by Joe Marsh

Sam Abernethy always said: "Curiosity may kill a cat - but I'm no cat." Which is Sam's way of saying that when he's curious about something he goes out and gets the facts.

Seems our government feels the same way. After hearing rumors about our soldiers drinking too much government people went after the facts. They got the evidence on what our boys drink . . . and don't drink.

The government found out our Army's the best behaved in history. More'n half of 'em drink beer—nothing stronger. And the government found that selling 3.2 beer in Army camps is one reason why our Army is so temperate.

From where I sit, there isn't much cause to worry about our men in the Army. Looks like they can take care o' themselves —and take care o' the Nazis and the Japs, too.

WALTON ADVERTISER

— NORTHERN KENTUCKY'S LEADING WEEKLY NEWSPAPER —

Devoted To the Interest of Boone, Kenton, Gallatin and Grant Counties—Kenton-Campbell Courier Consolidated With the Advertiser

Subscription $1.50 Per Year In Advance | WALTON, KENTUCKY, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER, 23rd, 1943 | VOLUME 29—NUMBER 45

Only $165,466.05 Subscribed So Far On Bond Quota

The total amount of subscriptions in the Third War Loan Drive for Boone County up to and including last Saturday night, September 18th, is oly $165,466.05. This amount having been subscribed by 459 people. This is a very poor showing on a quota of $732,900.00 and unless more interest is shown between now and September 30th, the date of closing the drive, Boone County will be far behind its goal. Some subscribers have come forward with double their subscriptions over the Second War Loan Drive last April but they can not overcome the lack of interest on the part of others. Some counties have reached their quotas and others have reached the two-thirds of their quotas and will go over the top. What is the matter with Boone County? We do not believe the citizens of Boone County are less patriotic than people of other counties and surely we do not want the word flashed to our soldiers who are bleeding and dying in the front lines on foreign soil that Boone County citizens are not behind them 100%. Our soldiers have the hardest fight yet before them and they are giving their ALL if need be for us here at home. Shall we ignore their plea for help with our money?

Go to your bank at once and make your subscription. The time is short in which to finish this drive. Your help is badly needed. Do not let our fighting men down.

Over 300 people filled the Court House in Burlington last Saturday night, representing almost every section of the county, to see the free pictures presented and to see and hear those soldiers, saliors and Marines, who had seen actual combat with our enemy, as well as the WACS, Waves and Marines now in the service, who were present.

European Corn Borer Control

The cooperation of farmers is needed to control the European Corn Borer. This insect pest is widely scattered on Northern Kentucky farms this year.

An important step in the control of the European corn borer can be carried out this fall when the corn is cut in the field.

High Stubble Harbors Many Borers

According to the United States Department of Agriculture, corn should be cut early and cut low, close to the ground.

According to information given in a table; the corn cut at ground level showed 0.59 percent borer infestation, 6 inches of stubble showed 9.87 percent borers; 10 inches of stubble showed 21.07 percent borers, 14 inches of stubble showed 34.16 percent borers.

Borer infestation increases with the length of corn stubble, for this reason corn should be cut close to the ground.

Mid-September cutting leaves about one-third as many borers in stubble of any given height as compared to early November cutting. The first step in borer control this fall is to cut corn at ground level and as early as possible.

Corn fodder that is infested with corn borer should be fed where the stalks can be gathered with a hay rake and burned in the early spring before the corn borer moth emerges to lay eggs, which in time hatch into borers.

Cooperation of farmers using control practices are necessary to check the spread of this destructive pest. Talk to your neighbors about control methods and enlist their cooperation in your neighgor hood. Begin this fall to reduce the damage of the corn borer in your community.

Proposed Freezer-Locker Plant Offers Local Farmers Opportunity

The proposed Freezer-Locker food plant at Walton offers farmers of Boone and adjoining counties a wounderful opportunity in greater and more economical use of home grown food supply according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. Plans for such a proposed plant has for the past four years been in the making. All interested farmers should act now to insure the securing of needed priorities.

Financing a plant costing approximately $15,000 has been the first obstacle. Under the prosposed Walton plant the financing has already been taken care of and all that is needed now is to secure subscription for 60% or 180 of the proposed 300 lockers to be installed. This means that those who purchase the locker space for one year have no financial worries as to the success of the venture.

Freezer-Locker plants operate on a rental baiss which in this case is $12.50 per six subic foot door type and $15 per year for a drawer type locker. A processing charge of three cents per pound for cutting meat or preparing the vegetables or fruits in proper meal size storage packages is also charged. The food properly handled under this program is preserved in the form that is of highest nutritional value.

The immediate problem at hand is the selling of at least the 60% or 180 of the proposed 300 lockers. This is necessary before applications for priorities can be filed in order to purchase construction materials. To date only ten such plants have been allotted to Kentucky and approximately twenty five applications are in the making. The sooner the applications are received the better are the chances of securing one of these plants locally.

R. M. "Coke" Hall of Walton reported last Saturday that already 110 signed applications had been received. Let's hope that all 180 needed applicants are on file before the last of the week. If you are interested act now. Applications should be sent to Mr. Hall at Walton.

Stoves Available To Care For All Essential Needs

Enough rationed stoves will be made available to care for all essential needs, residents of Boone County were assured today by R. E Brugh, chairman of the local War Price and Rationing Board, who said that applications received since the start of general stove rationing August 24 already exceed (or approach) the local board's quota for the first period.

Rationing of most types of domestic heating and cooking stoves which burn coal, wood, gas or oil was made necessary, R. E. Brugh pointed out, because nearly all large stove manufacturers have converted their factories to the manufacture of implements of war.

Figures revealed show that enough metal will be saved through stove rationing in one year to build 18,000 medium tanks, or 16,000 large anti-aircraft guns, or 160 large destroyers, R. E. Brugh said. Iron, steel, brass, chromium and numerous other metals badly needed in the making of war goods are being conserved through the restrictions on stove manufacture.

Production schedules for this year call for a total of 3,500,000 stoves of all kinds, compared to the 8,600,000 manufactured from July 1, 1940, to June 30, 1941, which is the base year used in determining production schedules. Thus there will be a deficiency of more than 5,000,000 units as compared to the supply in the base year.

Despite this large cut enough stoves will be made to take care of those eligible. Applicants must show that they have no usable stove at present and that they need one to heat essential living or working space or for cooking. Persons needing a stove to replace one worn out beyond repair also are eligible.

A quota of rationed stoves has been worked out and assigned to each local War Price and Rationing Board, R. E. Brugh said. These quotas were arrived at by the Office of Price Administration after a study of census data, number of dwelling heated by stoves, number using cooking stoves, and past use of fuel, adjusted to take care of population shifts.

This study was broken down by states and counties. Reserves also were set up at OPA district, regional and national levels to take care of emergency demands.

After the first quota period, August 24 to September 30, when reports on the number of eligible applicants are available from local boards, quotas will be adjusted on the basis of demonstrated need.

Additional Soil Building Material Offered Farmers

An additional 1934 soil-building allowance officially designated as the "1943 Supplementary Materials" has recently been authorized by the Agricultural Adjustment Agency. This allowance is in addition to the 1943 soil-building allowance and is available only as conservation material to eligible farmers and it must be used by December 31, 1943. Every one that has signed a 1943 Farm Plan is eligible to receive this extra allowance, provided the material is available and the order is placed before November 15, 1943.

The conservation materials now available are: Winter Hairy Vetch, 20% Porsphate and Limestone. The supply of phosphate and vetch are limited, it is hoped that most of the orders for supplementary materials will be for limestone. Limestone, as grant of aid, has recently been approved. The deduction rate from the 1943 payment being $2.50 per ton and the credit for using it $1.70 per ton, where it is used as supplementary material after the regular 1943 soil-building allowance is earned, the credit will equal the deduction so that there will be no extra charge to pay unless spreading is desired. The three dealers that have been approved to deliver limestone are: Dance Bros., John W. Moore and Gaines Aylor. Dance Bros., will deliver limestone in Walton, Verona, Beaver and Big Bone districts. They will not be able to spread it. John W. Moore will deliver limestone in Hebron, Constance, Burlington, Florence, Union and part of Hamilton Districts. He will spread it at .75c per ton. He has purchased a new type limestone spreader, that is automatic, requiring no help other than the driver. Gaines Aylor will be able to spread, if the farmer will furnish sufficient labor to shovel the limestone into the spreader, he will charge .25c per ton, and will deliver in Hebron, Constance, Burlington, Petersburg, Grant and East Bend districts. The entire County can be furnished limestone under this plan. The time is short and dealers may not be able to furnish all that is needed if a large amount of orders are received. They will be filled as they are received.

Several weeks ago farmers were advised if the 1943 soil-building allowance was earned orders for grant of aid material could be made to apply on the 1944 Program. The above plan now changes this procedure, as supplementary material can now be received in place of the materials to apply on the 1944 Program. All producers are being notified from the A. A. A. office, of this plan and it is hoped that all farmers will be able to take advantage of this opportunity for extra needed material.

Walton Drug Store Business Purchased by R. C. Brakefield.

Mr. R. C. Brakefield who purchased the Drug Store business from Mr. Robert Jones last week has been associated with Mr Jones for the past 18 years and needs no introduction as he and his family are well established citizens of Walton and are held in high esteem by the community.

It is fortunate that Mr. Jones has such a splendid young man to continue his well established business. We wish for him continued success.

Clocks To Be Set Back One Hour

In line with the change in time in Cincinnati, on Sunday at 2 a. m. Northern Kentucky will also move the hands of the clock back an hour.

In February, 1942, Northern Kentucky moved the clocks from Eastern Standard Time to Eastern War Time, which is two hours ahead of sun time. This has brought many complaints from those having to do their work before day light.

This hour, slower time is welcomed by many as the winter months are approaching.

Don't forget to set your time back one hour Sunday morning.

See Here, Private Hargrove!

by Marion Hargrove

W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: Private Marion Hargrove, former feature editor of a North Carolina newspaper, has been inducted into the army and is spending his training period at Fort Bragg. If you're going into the army, Hargrove advises a pre-induction period of "painting the town red." Once you wear the khaki "keep an open mind," he says, "for the first three weeks are the hardest." Having failed to master some of the fundamentals of army life, Hargrove has spent considerable time on KP duty. He has been classified as a cook. Thus he is fully familiar with the Company kitchen. Also a period of field maneuvers have made him familiar with sunburn. He is now undergoing treatment for this.

CHAPTER VIII

For once I have gone on sick call for purposes other than goldbricking. This time it was for sympathy, tenderness, and sunburn lotion. I got the sunburn lotion. Since then I have been confined to quarters—a pathetic, lorn creature wandering about the squadroom in a minimum of clothing and a glow of brilliant red light.

Things are getting fairly comfortable for a while. The poet Droschnop and the happy warrior Menza applied the ointment with tender care. Private Sher was asked to snaffle a sandwich from the mess hall and returned with a laden tray, replete with iced tea and a double portion of dessert. By sitting on the floor on my heels, I was even able to start reading the novel that has been taking up space in my foot locker for weeks.

"A minimum of clothing and a glow of brilliant red light."

But night must fall. In a case like this, where you're packed in grease like a boxed rifle, it's best to place one layer of newspaper between sheet and blanket. After lying there for a while, listening to the newspapers crackle exactly like burnt flesh every time you twist in agony, you feel the urge to sit up and look at some real stars.

They're drafting honest, respectable, hard-working soldiers back into civilian life now, as you probably read in the papers. Has-beens at twenty-eight, these good boys are turned into the pasture under a selective retirement system. It's interesting to watch the way they take it.

Our big loss in Battery A came Tuesday when Joe Gantt went back to Liberty, South Carolina, after five months in the citizen army. Joe is the nice corporal who looked like the soldier pictures in the magazines, used an instinctive psychology in handling his men, and knew every man in the battery as a friend.

He was on furlough last week when he was ordered to return at once to the battery. He came back, started through the discharge routine and went about hugging everybody with what looked like unbounded joy.

Then he started getting quieter and less demonstrative. He had been relieved from active duty for the remainder of his stay here—a matter of four or five days—and when the men fell out for calisthenics or drill, Corporal Gantt didn't have to go out with them. Every time the whistle blew, you could see a lonesome look creeping into his eyes.

The last time I saw him was Monday at noon, when we fell out for chow. Military procedure was over—thrown in a spontaneous revolution and Joe was drafted to march us to the mess hall. It was his last detail. Halfway to the mess hall, he gave us "Te the rear—march! To the right flank—march! To the right flank—march!" and all of the marching commands he had taught us.

He's returning to Liberty now, where he'll fall back easily into the life he left five months ago. But you could have seen from a casual glance that he was going to miss the Army.

I'm a student cook in the Army. Cooks are supposed to have the easiest work and the most comfortable positions the Army affords. Compared to the boys in the gun batteries, the signal corps, the anti-tank units, we're almost white-collar men.

We student cooks — the future "happiness" boys of the Army—have to get up for reveille at the usual hour, beating the sun to the rise every morning. We get an hour of calisthenics, directed by a noncom who's in good physical shape and expects us to be the same way. Then we drill for an hour, and hell hath no fury like that unleashed on the recreant who doesn't come up to standard in drill. We attend class for two hours and there's no foolishness there.

After lunch, we report to our kitchens, where we work until seven o'clock, taking our trade practically, taking part in the preparation of food for over two hundred hungry and fastidious soldiers. The next morning finds us in our kitchen at three or four o'clock and we stay there until one. We're supposed to have the afternoon off — unless there's something that has to be done in the line of battery duty.

When we leave those kitchens for the afternoon, we go back to our barracks for rest and sleep, which we need badly after the twenty-four-hour shift at huge coal-burning stoves. Reading is a popular diversion during the time, unless you pick up a magazine which tells you what slackers you are because you aren't like the author was in the Real war.

There's a different type of article that is equally nauseating. It tells of the poor little soldier boys, who give up everything to go into training thousands of miles from mother's lap and who will have to spend their time leaning against urban lampposts—because nothing is being done for their morale.

You're talking about entertainment, Gertrude—not morale. In the matter of entertainment, there's plenty of that to be found, even if it isn't like being back home toasting marshmallows with Her. There's so much being done here for entertainment that you can't get halfway to the Service Club without being drafted for a battery show or a volleyball game.

Morale is the spirit that gets you when you're out on the regimental parade ground with the whole battalion for retreat parade. Every mother's son there wants to look as much the soldier as the Old Man does. Not another sound can be heard before or after the one-gun salute to the colors or when the band crosses the field to a stirring march in the Display of the Colors. And when your battery passes in review before the colonel, you're firmly convinced that there isn't another battery on the field that makes as good a showing as your battery.

It's the enormous feeling you know when you sit in pitch dark before a pup tent in the field and

"Every mother's son wants to look as much the soldier as the old man does."

watch the Fort's searchlight cut the sky. It's the feeling you know when you can look across a great space and see long lines of Army trucks moving along every road you can see.

That's morale. Just a matter of pride.

The good earth on which Fort Bragg is situated is laden with tradition, ghosts of the glorious past, the old culture — and little else. Beautiful as it may be for purposes of military training, it has little interest in helping the little green things to grow. Grass and flowers, planted with loving care in the Sandhills dust, fade but too soon if left to shift for themselves. To nourish such vegetation, the cavalry units furnish the more aesthetic batteries with certain surplus commodities.

Private McGlauflin, Roff, and I had spent the better part of the morning with Corporal Cleveland James Farmer, heaving and hauling coal in preparation for the long hard winter, when the top sergeant decided that the borders around the barracks should be given their autumn tonic. We piled back into our truck and sped away to the haunts of the hoss cavalry.

We knew, after a few miles of riding, that we were nearing the cavalry territory. There was a certain unmistakable quality about the atmosphere. Something New Had Been Added.

The hoss cavalry, it must be said, takes great pains with the care and distribution of its vitamin deposits. As far as the eye can see the eye can see orderly, cubical mounds covered with straw and earth. None but the most deserving criminal offenders—men who have earned their letter ("P" for "prisoner") are permitted to serve in the maintenance division of this essential agricultural enterprise.

We three—McGlauflin, Roff, and I —stood high on the crest of a hill, loading the truck with its precious cargo, commenting on the invigorating quality of the air, and pausing ever and anon to lean on our pitchforks and listen to the conversation of other workers about us.

Some there were who could not see the importance of the service they were rendering; others spoke disparagingly of the place and bitterly cursed man's best friend, the horse. Two soldiers who shared a single pitchfork at the next truck spent all their time discussing the comparative beauties of the music of Liszt and Tchaikovsky, proving that art endureth forever even in an alien atmosphere.

As for myself, I gloried in the honor of the tradition I was helping to carry out. My mind drew pictures of the philosopher Ward Beecher Threatt, who boasts that he carried a pitchfork through the heat of the fiercest battles throughout the last war.

We made three trips to the cavalry barnyard before we had finished enriching the earth about the orderly room, the mess hall, and the four barracks of Battery A. We bathed vigorously and dressed for early dinner.

The mess sergeant met us at the door. He sniffed the air delicately and quietly closed the door in our faces. Then he made the rounds, closing the windows nearest us. "Gil!" he said.

We went back to the barracks, where we found our comrades returned from the classroom. We sat down on our foot lockers and strove to remain as inconspicuous as possible. Private Sher was the first to speak.

"Do you smell something?" Private Sher asked with unaccustomed rudeness. Everyone, it seemed, smelled something. It was not, they decided, Chanel Number Five. It was not My Sin or Evening in Paris. One of the citizen-soldiers, who had once worked in the stockyards, knew what it was.

When the hunt came nearer, Privates McGlauflin, Roff, and I arose and quietly left the squadroom and quietly sat by the newly invigorated grass borders outside.

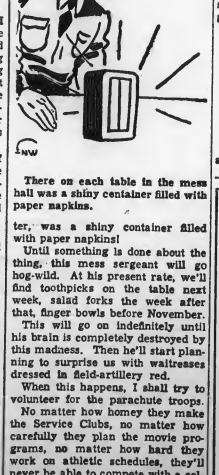
Maybe I spoke too soon when I denied the sissiness charges by magazine writers. It must be admitted, after yesterday's horrible disclosure, that some termite is boring from within us. Some force is sapping the rugged manliness of Battery A.



Here's what happened at supper yesterday evening. First of all, when we neared the end of the chow line, we found one of the cooks there, scooping ice cream out of a can. We are meat-and-potato men in Battery A and generally we do not take to such frilly fanciness as ice cream, although we occasionally humor the mess sergeant by letting him buy it in ready-cut blocks.

This time, we found, he had gone too far. Our leniency and intolerance in letting him buy ice cream had gone to his head. Now he was making it at home—in the respectable kitchen of Battery A! Homemade pineapple ice cream!

I didn't say anything about it. I thought that perhaps he was merely going through his second childhood, and second childhood is something that every mess sergeant must be permitted to go through once. Realizing this, we boys hadn't said anything when our mess sergeant had air-conditioning fans put in the kitchen windows to make nambypambies of the cooks and kaypees. We hadn't said anything when he started keeping jam on the table at all meals.

We're going to have to say something now. The man is going absolutely mad. Not content with springing homemade ice cream on us, he had to heap more coals on the fire of our impatience at the same meal.

There on each table in our mess hall, brazenly placed in the very center, was a shiny container filled with paper napkins!

There on each table in the mess hall was a shiny container filled with paper napkins.

Until something is done about the thing, this mess sergeant will go hog-wild. At his present rate, we'll find toothpicks on the table next week, salad forks the week after that, finger bowls before November.

This will go on indefinitely until his brain is completely destroyed by this madness. Then he'll start planning to surprise us with waitresses dressed in field-artillery red.

When this happens, I shall try to volunteer for the parachute troops.

No matter how homey they make the Service Clubs, no matter how carefully they plan the movie programs, no matter how hard they work on athletic schedules, they'll never be able to compete with a soldier's favorite evening recreation—sitting on the back steps, shooting the breeze.

Good Breads

"I want to know how to make good bread," is a desire expressed often by readers who write in and tell me their problems. Some feel making bread is a matter of good luck, while others are certain that if they just had a good recipe, they could make good bread.

Bread, good bread, is one of the easiest of all baked goods to make. The yeast bread takes longer for the process to be completed, but there is nothing hard about any of the steps. Bear in mind these essentials when baking bread with yeast:

1. Liquids used may be water, milk, diluted evaporated milk, potato water or a mixture of any of these. When using milk, scald and cool to lukewarm.

2. Yeast may be compressed, granular or dry.

3. Sugar is used to help yeast make leavening gas. Salt controls fermentation, gives flavor.

4. Add all flour necessary at the time of mixing, to keep dough from sticking, and to avoid dark streaks in bread.

5. Dough is kneaded until smooth and satiny. Curve the fingers over dough and push into it with the palms of the hands. The first kneading is longest—8 to 10 minutes required, never less than 5. After the dough is punched down the second time, only 2 minutes' kneading is necessary.

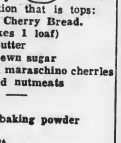
6. After the dough is kneaded, it is placed in a greased bowl.

Turn the dough over in bowl to grease it entirely and prevent a hard crust from forming. Cover dough with a cloth or waxed paper while rising. Temperature at which dough rises should be 82 degrees.

7. When punching dough down, punch hands into the center of the dough.

8. When dough has been punched down the second time and risen until double in bulk, and the dough retains dents when pressed lightly, it is ready for molding. Knead down and divide in portions for loaves.

Cover and let rest 10 to 15 minutes. To mold dough, flatten into a ball, fold lengthwise, and stretch three times the length of the pan. Overlap ends at center and fold lengthwise; flatten again, fold in thirds; seal edge; roll lightly and place in greased pan, fold down.



White Bread.
(Makes 4 1-pound loaves)
¼ cup sugar
2 tablespoons shortening
4 teaspoons salt
4 cups liquid, scalded
1 cake yeast
¾ cup lukewarm water
12 to 14 cups flour

Combine sugar, shortening, salt and liquid in a large mixing bowl. Cool to lukewarm, then add yeast, softened in lukewarm water. Add 4 cups of flour and beat thoroughly. Add remaining flour and mix gradually to a dough that won't stick to hands or bowl. Knead lightly on a floured board 8 to 10 minutes. Place in a greased bowl, cover closely, and let rise until double in bulk (2 to 2½ hours). Punch down and knead 2 minutes. Let rise again until double in bulk. Knead down. Divide into 4 portions for loaves. Cover and let rest 10 to 15 minutes. Mold in loaves. Place in greased pans. Cover closely and let set in a warm place until doubled in bulk and a light touch leaves a dent. Bake in a moderately hot (400 to 425-degrees) oven 40 to 45 minutes.

Bread is done when it shrinks from the pan and sounds hollow when tapped with finger. Remove loaves from pans immediately and cool on rack. For a crisp crust, neither grease nor cover loaves when cooling. For a soft crust, brush top of loaves with fat or salad oil after removing from oven.

Refrigerator Rolls.
(Makes 3 dozen medium-sized rolls)
1 cup milk, scalded
1 cup hot mashed potato
½ cup shortening
¼ cup sugar
2 teaspoons salt
1 cake yeast
½ cup lukewarm water
2 beaten eggs
5 to 6 cups flour

Combine milk, potato, shortening, sugar and salt in large mixing bowl. Add yeast softened in water and eggs. Add 1½ cups flour and beat well. Cover and let stand in a warm place for 1 hour, or until full of bubbles. Stir in 3½ to 4½ cups of flour to make a fairly stiff dough. Knead until smooth on a lightly floured surface. Return to greased mixing bowl. Grease top of dough. Cover and chill in refrigerator. About 1½ hours before serving time, shape desired number of rolls. Place in greased pans; let rise 1 hour. Bake in a hot oven (425 degrees) 15 to 20 minutes. Punch down unused dough and return to refrigerator.

You don't have time to make yeast rolls or bread? Then you will enjoy a lovely quick bread with a cherry-bran combination that is tops:

All-Bran Cherry Bread.
(Makes 1 loaf)
1 tablespoon butter
¼ cup light brown sugar
½ cup chopped maraschino cherries
¼ cup chopped nutmeats

2½ cups flour
4½ teaspoons baking powder
¾ cup sugar
¾ teaspoon salt
1 egg
1¼ cups milk
2 tablespoons melted shortening
1 cup all-bran
½ cup chopped maraschino cherries
¼ cup chopped nutmeats

Melt butter in loaf pan and sprinkle sugar, cherries and nutmeats evenly over bottom of pan.

Sift flour with baking powder, sugar and salt. Beat egg, add milk and shortening and stir into flour mixture. Add bran, cherries and nutmeats. Pour over cherry mixture and bake in a moderate oven.

Loaf may be baked omitting cherry-nut mixture on bottom of pan.

Lynn Says:

Homemade Breads: Wash the bread box out thoroughly so the bread will stay fresh and moist longer. Every week, the box should have a soapy sudsing, and thorough drying out in the sunshine. Bread sometimes becomes stringy, if a certain germ is allowed to become imbedded in the box through lack of cleanliness.

Have freshly baked rolls often, by making a batch of refrigerator dough to have on hand. Then make a variety of rolls from it to add interest to the menu—caramel rolls, cinnamon twists, poppyseed rolls, orange-filled rolls, etc.

If homemade bread tends to get that day-old flavor, freshen the loaves by sprinkling a little water in a brown bag, placing loaf of bread in it, and into the oven for several minutes.

MANY young homemakers are gaily setting forth to buy junk furniture for remodeling. The first thing they learn is to consider each piece not for what it is but for what it may be. The 40-year-old buffet shown here was picked up.

The sketch shows how the main part of the buffet was remodeled to make a chest under a window in a combination sewing and guest room. A wood chisel is useful for removing carving that is glued on and either putty or plastic wood may be used for filling screw holes and other holes. If the piece is varnished, it is best to rub it down with sandpaper to remove the high gloss before painting. What became of the mirror and legs of this buffet is another story to appear soon.

FOCAL INFECTIONS

I have spoken before of two ardent fishermen who arose at five o'clock every morning to fish their favorite spots. One of the two met me one day and suggested that I go with him as his friend Bill did not seem to be as interested as formerly.

Dr. Barton

"When I call at Bill's house now he is sound asleep and when I return to show him my catch three hours later, he is still asleep. His family tells me he sleeps most of the time also."

Bill used to be a wideawake fellow. What was causing Bill to be sleepy all the time? The cause was infected teeth, but this was not discovered until it was too late to save his life.

What are the symptoms of infection from teeth, tonsils, sinuses, gall bladder, large intestine, or other part of the body? "Tiredness, especially noted in the morning after a night's sleep which seems neither refreshing nor sufficient is a common symptom of focal infection. (Focal infection is where infection occurs at one focus or spot in the body and the poisons or wastes are carried from it by the blood to another spot. Thus the poison from an infected throat can go to a joint and set up an arthritis.)

"Apathy, lack of ambition, inability to concentrate and a dislike for mental work so that the patient must 'drive himself' to get anything done are often complained of. Dizziness, loss of appetite, temporary blurring of vision or blindness may be noted."

The above description of focal infection is given by Dr. M. Solis-Cohen in Medical World. It is worth while for all of us to study these symptoms of focal infection. The first thought might naturally be to take Epsom salts or other purgative to rid the large intestine and the blood of these poisons. This treatment would give relief where the cause is eating too much or exercising too little, as accumulated wastes from food can give symptoms of fatigue. But, where this tired, sleepy, "don't care" feeling is present all or most of the time, you should consult your physician and dentist.

Vision Improved by Vitamins A and B

It is interesting and very gratifying to learn that not only can many cases of color blindness be corrected but other disturbances of vision also, by simply improving the diet, especially by the use of foods containing vitamin A and vitamin B complex.

In the "Medical Clinics of North America," Dr. Arthur M. Yudkin, states:

"Considerable effort has been made to improve the eyesight (especially night blindness) of some aviators, sailors, drivers, and others by giving them large quantities of vitamin A. Some of these persons improved only after a well balanced diet and an extra supply of vitamin A and vitamin B complex were given. Some of these persons also had difficulty in passing the color tests as prescribed by the army and navy. After the daily use of fish oil concentrates (20,000 units of vitamin A), a powerful vitamin B complex (two tablespoons of powerful yeast powder or an equivalent concentrate; and a well-balanced diet, the color vision, and the night blindness of many of these persons improved." Other diseases which affect the lining of the eyelids and the outer surface of the eyeball are also cured or helped by the use of vitamin A and vitamin B complex.

However, Dr. Yudkin does not suggest that treatment for these eye conditions should be by vitamins alone but that a search should be made for the cause of these eye disturbances in these persons. Thus diseases of the stomach, liver and intestine may be preventing the body making full use of food eaten, including the vitamins. Only careful questioning by the physician may bring out that disturbances of the digestive system are present.

The thought then is that our eye specialists, because the tissues of the eyes are affected as can other tissues by lack of vitamins or other valuable foodstuffs, are able to notify the family physician of their findings. The eye disturbance can then be corrected by a suitable diet and removal of digestive disturbances.

Improved Uniform International SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson for September 26

ABIDING VALUES FROM ISRAEL'S HISTORY

LESSON TEXT—Deuteronomy 11:13-25.

GOLDEN TEXT—Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people.—Proverbs 14:34.

What makes a nation great? God's dealings with Israel answer that question. The history which we have briefly touched upon in our study of the first four books of the Bible is reviewed in Deuteronomy.

Moses, realizing that the end was at hand for him and that a new generation was about to go into the promised land, reviewed the history of the people, restated their laws, and renewed the appeal of God for their loyal obedience. This record is found in the Book of Deuteronomy, from which our lesson is taken.

We find here that the nation which is truly great—

I. Worships the True God (vv. 13-15).

There is a fundamental factor which must underlie all real national greatness—love of God. This has an inseparable corollary—serving Him "with all your heart, and all your soul."

Says the wise man of Proverbs (14:34), "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people." We have well-nigh forgotten that fact. We need to be reminded of it again in God's word to Israel.

What is the result? The blessing of God upon the land, the giving of abundant harvest, in fact, the open-handed generosity of God.

II. Heeds God's Warning (vv. 16, 17).

This is the negative side. God dealt with Israel through promises if they were faithful, and the threat of judgment if they forgot Him.

One is as important as the other in the leading of a nation—and in the rearing of children. We, like our heavenly Father, should faithfully keep every promise; but we should just as surely fulfill every warning of coming judgment.

America has seen the handwriting of God in warning concerning its waywardness and sin. Will it heed and avoid further judgment?

III. Honors God's Word (vv. 18, 19).

Loving God and His Word is not a matter for theological speculation or for sanctimonious discussion in some dark cloister. Thank God the Christian faith is at its best in the ordinary affairs of life. It finds its proper place in the tender relationship of parent and child. Its teachings are pure, delightful, simple, and entirely appropriate to any occasion, whether one sits or rises, walks or lies down. God's words are the words to be laid up in the heart and in the soul, to be taught to our children, to be the constant and normal subject of conversation.

IV. Testifies for God (vv. 20, 21).

Here again we have the home before us. And it is, of course, the home which makes the nation. If the home speaks for God, the nation will do so, inevitably and effectively.

We may not, as did the pious Jew, fasten a little container bearing God's Word on our doorpost, but we may make the home itself and the life of its inhabitants an effective testimony for God before our neighbors.

It is obvious that the home either speaks for or against God. A profession of faith in Him, an outward reputation for adherence to religious principles which does not vitally touch our dealings with one another and with the community in which we live—these clearly testify not for God but against Him. On the other hand, who can estimate the value of a sweet and orderly Christian home? Whether it be on a dusty city street, or on a quiet country lane, it is a light that cannot be hid.

V. Counts on God for Victory (vv. 22-25).

God promised that if Israel diligently kept His commandments, loved Him and walked in His ways, they would be a nation that would overcome and dispossess their enemies, and prosper in every good purpose.

God desires the nation which honors His name to stand before the other nations of the earth victorious and prosperous.

The purpose of the Lord for Israel was a far greater one than they ever achieved, because they fell into sin and drew back in unbelief. The limits of the land which He proposed to give them, as stated in verse 24, far exceed that which they did possess in Palestine.

God's plans are large plans. His promises to us, like those to Israel, are stupendous. We need to learn to take Him at His word.

"No man shall be able to stand before you" (v. 25) was the promise to Israel. "Ask what ye will" (John 15:7) is the promise to us. They failed because they did not believe God. Will we fail for the same reason?

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

If authorities prove to be correct, post-war tires may give 75,000 or more miles of service. Super-tough rayon, nylon or improved cotton carcass will help to make this mileage possible.

Army raincoats formerly containing 40 per cent crude rubber now are made almost entirely of synthetic resin and oil-treated material. Crude rubber content of boots and overshoes has been cut about 40 per cent.

A complete armored division on the road has 13,488 tires in use, not counting spares and reserve supplies.

Aviator's Toothache

A dental cavity that never bothers an airman on the ground will usually give him a toothache at altitudes from 10,000 to 30,000 feet, owing to the expansion of body gas at low atmospheric pressure, says Collier's. In several cases, the carious condition producing the pain was in such an early stage that it was not detectable in an X-ray photograph.

And a carton of Camels is a favorite gift. Though there are now Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. But It Seems the Simple One Was Not Old Andy

In a little wayside town there lived old Andy, who was what is called in some parts a "natural." He was simple-minded and the villagers used to show him off to visitors by offering him two coins, a big five cent piece and a small silver dime. Andy would invariably take the nickel.

One day a visitor from other parts said to him: "Say, Andy, don't you know the difference between a nickel and a dime?"

"Sure," said Andy, "I know the difference between a nickel and a dime, but if I took the dime once, they would never offer me either one again."

Singing Sands

The "singing sands" of the Arabian desert have mystified travelers for thousands of years. These sands produce the most unusual sound effects, ranging from the rumble of drums to the high-pitched twanging of harp strings. Sounds are produced over the musical dunes by the movement of sand grains in the wind.

Only sand grains of a certain size, shape, and uniformity will produce these interesting sounds. This accounts for the vast acreages of silent sand in many lands.

How can ALL-BRAN'S amazing results be explained—when so many other methods fail? Scientists say it's because ALL-BRAN is a rich source of cellulosic elements—lack of which is a common cause of constipation. These special cellulosic elements help the intestinal flora fluff up and lighten the contents of the colon for easy, natural evacuation! KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN is not a "purgative" that robs the intestines of water! Not "roughage" that acts by sweeping you out! It's a gentle-acting, natural "regulating" food!

Eat KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN regularly! Drink plenty of water! See if you, too, aren't amazed at the results! Insist on genuine ALL-BRAN, made only by Kellogg's in Battle Creek!

"This War Will Become Bigger and Tougher . . . During the Long Months to Come"

Franklin D. Roosevelt

Italy has fallen—but the war is not over and you know it! Think of Berlin and Tokyo—think of the men dying at this moment.

Can we, you and I, afford to let them down—to turn their battlefront victory into a home-front defeat? Let's buy more War Bonds than ever... let's back up their victory with ours—the success of the 3rd War Loan!

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT said it, as Commander-in-Chief:

"I say that we Americans will not be satisfied to send our troops into the fire of the enemy with equipment only equal to that of the enemy. We are determined to provide our troops with overpowering superiority of quality and quantity of arms and armaments..."

Our fighting men will do their job—it's up to you, personally, to keep their victories safe by buying War Bonds NOW with every dollar you can—not with what you'd ordinarily save or invest, but more—every bit more you can manage.

Wartime Lighting Suggestions
HOW TO GET MORE LIGHT FROM YOUR PRESENT EQUIPMENT

Use Shades with Light Linings to Reflect More Light

If your lamp shades are not white or very light-colored on the inside you're losing a lot of valuable light. Dark colors soak up light like a sponge—in some cases as much as 30% to 50% is lost. Clean your lamp shades regularly, or if they're too dark or discolored with age, replace them with clean, light-lined shades that reflect light instead of absorbing it. You'll find you'll get a lot more light from the same bulbs.

HOW TO CLEAN LAMP SHADES

Parchment paper shades should be dusted with a clean cloth. Silk shades with fancy trimming such as appliqued ornaments, and shades of shrinkable material should be dry cleaned. Plain silk or rayon shades can often (but not always) be washed successfully provided they are stitched and not glued. To wash, first remove all surface dirt with soft brush, then hold by wire frame at top and dip up and down repeatedly in lukewarm suds made from mild soap flakes. Rinse through three or four lukewarm rinses using same up and down dipping motion. Dry very fast, hanging in shade outdoors in warm, breezy weather, or suspending over radiator or stove, using fan to accelerate drying, in inclement weather.

Electricity ..is vital to war production. Use all you need but don't waste it just because it's cheap and isn't rationed.

Strongly Intrenched Nazi Divisions Lock Allies in Hand-to-Hand Combat As Cost of Italian Invasion Mounts; Germans Continue Retreat in Russia

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysts and not necessarily of this newspaper.)
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

Field pieces like this 105 mm. gun were instrumental in battering the Japanese defenses at fallen Salamaua, New Guinea. Manning the gun are Private George Basmajian (left background) of Fresno, Calif.; Private Glenn Hood, (center) Marrilton, Ark.; and Private Henry Garcia, (right) Eaton, Colo.

ITALY:
Bloody Fighting

Twenty miles of beach below Salerno, where American troops first set foot on the European mainland, was a raging inferno, with battle-hardened German troops fighting to throw the Allies back into the sea.

Streaming ashore from their barges with supplies speedily unloaded, Lieut. Gen. Mark Clark's Fifth army of American, British and Canadian troops ran into a stout German defense that made good use of the unfavorable terrain.

High in the hills above the beaches, the Germans 88-mm. artillery poured fire all along the landing strip; nestled behind orange and apple trees, and hidden in the tall sweet corn, their machine gunners worked, and summing up all of their experience, their panzer divisions stabbed into our lines, exposing the backs of the infantry turning to meet the attack to their rifle fire.

But in bloody fighting, the Allied units struggled bitterly to hold their ground, throwing their own tank divisions against the Germans, and locking in hand-to-hand combat with the enemy when he drove to the beaches. One-hundred miles to the south, the British Eighth army beat forward in an effort to join with the sorely pressed Fifth army.

Restore Il Duce

Whisked from a mountainous plateau east of Rome by German paratroopers, according to a romantic dispatch from Hitler's headquarters, stubby, grizzled Benito Mussolini, architect of Fascism, was reinstalled in northern Italy to try to rebuild the broken ruins of his edifice.

Benito Mussolini

As Mussolini assumed the task of heading a national government which the Germans set up in his name, the Duce's tough old Fascist militia reappeared in their black shirts on the streets of Italy's northern cities, and re-established themselves in control.

Once the most popular man in Italy, Mussolini's first acts were reported to be abrogation of Marshal Badoglio's unconditional surrender to the Allies as it might affect that part of the country under his dominance, and dissolution of the monarchy, with which he faithfully cooperated until it broke his power.

PORK:
Production High

With a hog population of over 100 million for the year, pork production is expected to approximate 12 billion pounds for the 12 months ending next June 30.

Of the 12 billion pounds, between 7 and 8 billion are to be allotted to civilians. The army will receive 1 billion and the remainder is marked for our Allies, notably Great Britain and Russia.

Some effect on total pork production is expected as a result of the government's support of prime light weights in an effort to conserve scarce feed supplies, and the $14.75 ceiling, Chicago basis, recently established.

FOOD PRICES:
Down 2.3%

Living costs will drop 2.3 per cent to within 2 per cent of September, 1942, levels with the government's subsidization of apples, oranges, potatoes, onions, peanut butter, lard, shortening and cooking oils.

Chester Bowles

According to the general manager of the OPA, Chester Bowles, cost of the program is expected to total 100 million dollars, which will be in addition to the 400 million dollars already being expended to reduce meat and butter prices.

In explaining the program, Bowles said that the government will pay some of the transportation costs of oranges, and will buy the entire potato crop and resell it at lower prices. Subsidies for peanut butter, lard and other shortenings will be paid to processors. Efforts will be made to cut prices of fresh fruits and vegetables 15 per cent below last winter's levels, Bowles said.

SOUTHWEST PACIFIC:
New Guinea Victory

Cut off from communication from the north by Gen. Douglas MacArthur's daring envelopment of Lae with sea and air borne troops, the stubborn Japanese garrison of Salamaua abandoned that New Guinea base.

Beating their way through the thick jungle northward, remnants of the garrison sought to join up with the enemy forces at Lae. But there, no better fate awaited them, as airborne U. S. paratroopers advanced on that base from the west, while Australian units pressed in from the east, where they had been landed by Allied naval forces.

Built in plantations on both sides of the place, Lae's defenses came under the artillery fire of heavy Allied guns, and Allied troops moved slowly forward against earthen machine-gun and rifle nests. The New Guinea and Solomon islands conquests meant the encirclement of the great Jap air and naval base of Rabaul, New Britain, and the anticipated neutralization of that center for future South Pacific action.

RUSSIA:
Move Forward

Following their plan of defensive action to conserve their strength to meet the shock of the Allies' charge in the west, the Germans fell steadily back toward the broad, winding Dnieper river all along the front.

Surging forward, Red troops entered Bryansk, east of the Dnieper's headwaters, once the Germans' key communication point on the central front.

To the south of Bryansk, Russian troops plowed closer to the Ukrainian capital of Kiev, which stands on the west bank of the Dnieper. And still farther down the river, the Reds moved in on Dnepropetrovsk, whose Dnieper dams supplied the power for the southern Ukraine.

In shortening their lines, the Germans surrendered rich farm land and territory abounding in raw material. They did, however, destroy all factories.

HIGHLIGHTS . . . in the week's news

EXCHANGED: According to a roundabout statement from Tokyo, the exchange ship Teia Maru has sailed from Yokohama with 1,250 American civilians, bound for Mormugao, Portuguese India. The Gripsholm left New York on September 2, carrying 1,330 Japanese to the same port, where an exchange will be effected, it has been reported.

SHEEP: The largest run of sheep since 1921 passed through the Omaha livestock market recently, when 48,000 animals were sold. Dealers attribute the large influx principally to fear of ranchers in the West that they cannot find sufficient herders to tend the sheep over the winter, condition of range pastures also were said to be about 83%.

Willed $72,000,000

On September 28, Marshall Field III, grandson of Chicago's pioneer merchant prince, will be 50 years old. On that day, he will receive the residue of his illustrious grandfather's estate, amounting to approximately $72,000,000.

Marshall Field

Added to about $93,000,000 previously obtained under the terms of the will, the September 28 bequest will make Field one of the richest men in the United States. He is the father of five children.

Through investments made by trustees of the estate, Field will have an interest in such outstanding Chicago realty enterprises as the 44-story Field skyscraper; the 38-story Pittsfield building, and the 22-story Conway structure. Through Field's own initiative, the trustees also erected the 600-family Garden Apartments on Chicago's near North side, in one of the first slum-clearance projects in the country.

DADS' DRAFT:
Seek Others First

While congress sought to untangle the complicated manpower situation state draft boards were ordered to make an extensive inventory of all available single and childless married men to assure their induction before fathers.

Under the order, all of a state's available single and childless married men will be pooled as a whole and will be drafted before fathers. Quotas of individual boards will be suspended, so that those with more men available will be able to go over their allotments, while those with less, will be allowed to fall under.

Congressional demands for the postponement of the fathers' draft inspired efforts for a general investigation of the whole manpower situation, to determine approximate military and industrial needs.

Employment Drops

In the face of the demand for congressional action on the manpower situation, the department of labor reported total non-farm employment in August at 38,295,000, a drop of 88,000 from July.

For the first time since the wartime shipbuilding program was inaugurated, employment dropped in the shipyards. Heavier declines were recorded in the construction and service industries.

In war industry as a whole, employment increased 29,000. Approximately 9,000 less workers were reported in non-manufacturing fields.

According to Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, men workers during the next few months will no more than replace those entering the armed services and auxiliaries. However, she said, many can be switched to war production from less essential industry.

BANKS:
Double U. S. Holdings

Federal Reserve member banks held 44½ billion dollars of government obligations, June 30, almost double the amount of a year ago.

At the same time, it was announced that interest rates on short term commercial paper rose to an average of 3 per cent, compared with 2.76 in March.

On June 30, total loans and investments of the banks amounted to more than 67 billion dollars, approximately 20 billion dollars more than a year ago.

WORLD COURT:
Proposed by Hull

Submission of all international problems for arbitration and the use of force to check aggression were proposed by Secretary of State Cordell Hull for maintenance of world peace.

Cordell Hull

For problems of a political character, Hull advocated the establishment of agencies which would mediate the various differences. For problems of a legal nature, he suggested creation of a World Court, operating on principles of law.

"But to assure peace," Hull declared, "there must be means for restraining aggressors . . . The peacefully inclined nations must be willing to accept responsibility for this task in accordance with their respective capacities."

Although each nation has its own peculiar interests, it still has enough in common with other countries to fight for maintenance of peace, Hull said.

BOOTLEGGING:

With bonded liquor scarce and subject to high federal, state and local taxes, the bootlegger is coming back, asserts M. L. Curtis, president of the National Alcoholic Beverage Control association, and a member of the Iowa state liquor commission.

The situation threatens to create a "bootleggers' paradise," said Mr. Curtis. The old-time bootlegger is already offering "hootch" at bargain prices, he said.

ALLIED CO-OPERATION BETTER

Officials who have attended all the big strategy powwows—Washington, Casablanca, Washington again, and Quebec—declare that there is progressively better Allied co-operation, and a gradual disappearance of the friction which beset earlier conferences.

In the dark days just after Pearl Harbor, the British were plugging for an all-out war against Hitler, while the U. S. officers, outraged over Pearl Harbor, were out to scalp the Japs.

The decision to swing our weight with the British was made only after President Roosevelt had exercised his authority as commander-in-chief and overruled ambitious U. S. plans for the Pacific.

After that decision, there came disagreement about where to strike in the European theater. U. S. army staff officers argued in favor of a cross-chsnnel operation, but Churchill and the British staff shrank from spilling blood against the steel-and-concrete shoreline of France and the Low Countries.

Instead, Churchill wanted the U. S. army sent to North Africa, to aid in the reconquest of the Mediterranean. Again, Roosevelt supported Churchill against his own military chiefs, but not until after strong debate in the inner councils.

Another issue was the question of aid to Russia and Britain, which U. S. army and navy officers wanted to cut down from the Roosevelt-Hopkins-Churchill estimates. The Russian cause was upheld against all comers by Harry Hopkins, and Maj. Gen. James H. Burns, executive of the munitions assignment board. Burns' favorite remark is, "Those Russians are killing more Germans than anybody else, and they ought to have the equipment to keep up the good work."

The major decisions that have come from all the controversies have now borne favorable fruit. The Mediterranean is cleared, U. S. forces have been tested under fire, landing operations have had full dress rehearsals for the bigger job of crossing the channel, and the Russians are "keeping up the good work."

So when the British and Americans get together now, there is much more warmth than at one time. There still are some friendly differences as there must be when strong men sit down together, and it is reported that U. S. military leaders still chafe at lack of action across the channel. But on the whole, success is making the road easier.

MILK SHORTAGE

Most serious food problem facing the civilian population at the moment is the threatened shortage of milk.

White House farm advisers warn that we will have a very real and acute milk famine on our hands unless the War Food administration and the Office of Price Administration act quickly to adjust the price of feed grain for dairy cattle.

Due to higher feed costs, dairy farmers, especially in the East, are unable to sell their milk under OPA price ceilings and stay in business. Dairy farmers in Pennsylvania and other Eastern states, hard hit by the drouth, have been losing as much as $35 per cow because of lack of pasture. As winter draws on, the pasture problem, plus higher feed costs, will vitally affect milk production all over the country.

So far the War Food administration, under its new chief, Marvin Jones, has done nothing to meet this pressing problem. But unless he does the President will be urged to take matters in his own hands and arrange for feed price subsidies through legislative action. Failing that, he can, by an executive order, provide feed funds from the Commodity Credit corporation.

SOLDIERS SEE THE U. S. A.

The war department has supplied figures showing the amazing distance which the average soldier travels in the course of training.

From the time of his induction to embarkation, each soldier is transferred six to eight times, for an average distance of 850 miles each time. This makes a total equal to two complete trips across the continent.

In World War I, there was far less troop movement. The average number of transfers was only three.

Tripartite Picture Clearer Since Meeting in Quebec

U. S., England, Russia Agreed on Fundamental Policies; Observers Optimistic Concerning War, Post-War Cooperation.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

The ink is now dry on the secret footnotes which appear in the memoranda officially recorded after the long and quiet conversations which took place in the presidential study in the White House when the Allied strategists worked out the end of another chapter in the history of World War II.

My own modest notations, scribbled on the backs of envelopes, and on scratch pads, and written in taxicabs, leaning against a White House elm after a press and radio conference, taken down while the President or other officials were speaking, make a clearer pattern.

Words and phrases take on new meanings, rough sketches are filled out in revealing detail.

The speculation, the criticism, the attacks and the apologies which swirled about the Allied policy toward Russia, for instance, it is plain now was built mostly on half knowledge.

While press and public were crying for a tripartite meeting of the representatives of Russia, Britain and the United States, the arrangements for a whole series of meetings were already being made. It was not until almost the end of the Roosevelt-Churchill visit that we learned, first, that the tripartite meetings "on the foreign minister level" had been definitely agreed upon and, second, (which no one then guessed) that a commission was to be formed of representatives of all three powers to discuss the situation arising out of the Allied victories in the Mediterranean in which Russia is so deeply concerned but which, militarily speaking, she has been forced to view from a distance. When we received that news, we were unable to indicate its source.

The Darlan Question

Another source of bitter controversy which has been allowed to fester was cleared up at the same time. Certain groups in England and America from the very beginning violently objected to the choice of Darlan as the man with whom the Allies dealt in North Africa. There have been two revelations on that score which, had they come earlier, might have cleared the air.

One concerns the Russian attitude—and the Russians certainly ought to lean as far to the left as anyone. It now seems that the Soviet leaders, frankly opposed to Darlan and all he stood for, actually accepted the British and American policy on the basis of an old Russian saying that in matters of military strategy —or comparable situations—it is sometimes necessary to deal with the devil and his grandmother.

A word from the chief of staff revealed in his annual report to the secretary of war is interesting in this connection. He says of the diplomatic preparation before the invasion of Africa: "Should an approach be made to a single Frenchman who proved unsympathetic to our purpose, we risked the slaughter of our soldiers on the beaches of North Africa as well as decisive losses to our shipping . . . unexpectedly, Admiral Jean Darlan, Petain's designated successor, and commander-in-chief of all French forces, was found to be in Algiers visiting his sick son when our forces landed. He was taken into protective custody and when it was found that French leaders stood loyal to the Vichy government, a series of conferences immediately followed with the purpose of calling a halt to the French resistance against General Patton's task force in the vicinity of Casablanca."

The Background

Then, on the morning of November 11, the Germans invaded France and Darlan obligingly rejected the pseudo-independent Vichy government and assumed authority in North Africa in the name of Marshal Petain and ordered the French to cease all hostilities.

Just what pressure or argument was used in getting Darlan to yield to Allied wishes has never been revealed or what his motives may have been—they may indeed have been prompted by the devil or his grandmother—but those who knew he inside military expediency, did not quarrel with his action. Death took Darlan from the picture. It did not end the arguments, but since we know now that the head of the Communist state of Russia was able to swallow Darlan, the squeamishness of some of the critics seems a little far fetched.

In the days that followed the recall of the Soviet ambassadors to London and Washington, the outcry over the absence of Stalin at Quebec increased. Roosevelt, Churchill and Secretary Hull were blamed—there was the blow-up over the charges by a columnist who said Hull was anti-Russian.

I talked with Secretary Hull about that time. Whatever his feelings may be regarding communism, he indicated from his remarks to me that Russia was looking sympathetically on the attempts at a joint conference, and a few days later, a high British source stated flatly there was no great divergence of views between the Soviets and the Allies.

Agreement

Both were thoroughly agreed on the necessity of the destruction of Nazi tyranny and Prussian militarism, and it was revealed that Marshal Stalin was rising in prestige with the army and that the Soviet army was rising in prestige with the Russian people until it was already on a level with the communist party itself. This seemed to indicate, as Captain Rickenbacker said when he returned from Russia, that the ideologies of the policies and the capitalist nations were growing nearer.

Today, as Washington looks back on this last visit of Prime Minister Churchill, there is a feeling that not only are Britain and the United States closer in both their war and their post-war aims, but that the possibility of bringing the Soviets into the circle is greater. One reason for this is that certain problems on which there has been disagreement have been met and thrashed out successfully between Roosevelt and Churchill and the way is open to a much more extended discussion with Stalin's representatives.

Meanwhile, the position of Secretary Hull, within the administration, has been greatly strengthened as one after another, he has taken over the functions of all agencies which have any dealings whatsoever with foreign countries. He has placed the question frankly before the President who had to choose between his secretary of state and those who opposed him inside and outside of the state department.

Hull's Position

Secretary Hull's position is this: the policies which I have sponsored and insisted upon have justified themselves. Either my department must have full authority in the field of foreign relations or I will hand in my portfolio.

The President faces, first, a congress which has had time to think over its position, has heard the complaints and received the advice of its constituents. It returns determined to imprint its will on national policy, foreign and domestic. Its texture is and has been for some time strongly away from the so-called new-deal policies, strongly toward the conservative side. Secretary Hull probably stands higher, has more friends, and can exert more influence with congress than any member of the cabinet. The President needs a congress which will stand behind him if he is to carry out the plans for further conduct of the war and the winning of the peace according to methods he believes it is necessary to employ.

And, of course, there is the fourth term ahead, for continuance in office is essential, the President's friends believe, if he is to mold the post-war world.

Secretary Hull is his anchor to windward. This is due to his political influence and also because he and what he symbolizes both at home and abroad, have become inextricably bound up in world negotiations.

And for the President, there is but one objective now—that is, to be the peacemaker as he was the war leader. All else—choice of counsellors, domestic policies, must dovetail into that purpose.

It may be caused by disorder of kidney function that permits poisonous waste to accumulate. For truly many people feel tired, weak and miserable when the kidneys fail to remove excess acids and other waste matter from the blood.

Local Farm Woman Has Good Record As Chicken Raiser.

Mrs. Sam Sleet of the Beaver neighborhood bought 200 New Hampshire Red baby chicks on April 13 of this year. They were just good ordinary chickens when purchased. Mrs. Sleet put them in a home built brooder that is heated by a coal stove. These chicks were fed a 20% starting ration. The feed was mixed by a local feed dealer.

The remarkable part about this project is that not one chick died. Much of this succes can be contributed to Mrs. Sleet's unfailing care. The water fountains were never empty and the temperature in the brooder was never allowed to vary more than 6 to 8 degrees.

This flock of chickens has not yet been on the ground. They have been kept inside the house and on a wire suporch.

These baby chicks were purchased April 13 and the first egg was laid August 26. Most of the cockerels were sold a fryers, leaving more than 100 large pullets that are laying about 30% at present.

More Forest Products From Farm Woodlands.

Frankfort, Ky., Sept.—K. G. McConnell, Director of the Division of Forestry, received a notice from the War Food Administration today that a program is now under way to increase sharply the production of forest products from farm-owned woodlands as part of the nationwide drive to meet wartime military and essential civilian needs for lumber.

McConnell stated that the program has been developed cooperatively by the War Food Administration, the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture, and the War Production Board. In the field, the program will be carried out as part of the national food production program under the Director of State and County Agricultural War Boards, with the assistance of State and Federal agencies which have technical forestry personnel. It is expected to produce best results in Southern, Northeastern and Middle-western areas where the bulk of the farm wood land exist. It is estimated that 3½ million farms have woodlands, most of which can yield marketable products.

"It is necessary for farm woodlands to furnish a larger part of the total national requirements for wood products," McConnell pointed out. "Before the war, one third of the nation's forest products came from the 139 million acres of commercial farm woodlands. Agriculture is one of the nation's big users of lumber and farmers, who produce the food, can, through the lumber production program, make a major contribution toward its safe delivery to the armed forces and other consumers participating in the drive toward victory."

One of agriculture's most urgent needs is for lumber for packing and shipping food. Minimum national requirements for lumber in 1943 total 36 billion board feet. Of this, 2½ billion board feet are needed for boxing and crating military products and other civilian products. Manufacturers of agricultural machinery and equipment are also large users of lumber. In addition, it is estimated that about 3½ billion board feet are needed on farms for essential new construction, repair, and maintenance of farm buildings structures.

Just ask the Emile Hegys what The American Spirit means

They know how precious is this thing that ONLY AMERICANS HAVE...for they fled a land where it never existed

Emile and Marie Hegy were born and wed in Alsace Lorraine at a time when their native land was under the heel of a conqueror.

In May 1924, they freed themselves from the political and economic uncertainty that governed their daily lives and came to America.

Emile started work as a laborer in the L&N car shop at Birmingham, Alabama. Soon there came a proud day when he and Marie became full-fledged citizens in a land where individual rights and freedoms were guaranteed.

On December 7, 1941, war came to America . . . their America now. That day found the one-time "common laborer," Emile Hegy, a valued L&N veteran in a good paying job, earned on merit . . . a thing that would have been impossible in a land where men live under government decree and a common laborer must remain a common laborer until he dies.

Hardly before war was declared next day, Emile and Marie Hegy bought a $1,000 Defense Bond, the first $1,000 bond sold that day in Birmingham. Then, as fast as they could convert investments into cash, the Hegys bought more bonds. Today, a substantial part of every L&N pay check to Emile Hegy goes for the purchase of still more War Bonds.

Emile and Marie would tell you that they are buying all the War Bonds they can afford for TWO reasons. One is to help beat Hitler and Hirohito. The other . . . to help make sure that America will keep the priceless American Spirit alive.

That is the Spirit that laid the railroads, dug the mines, built the factories that make possible our arsenal of freedom today. It is the Spirit that will never die, so long as we remain free to strive in our own individual ways, for our own individual betterment.

J. B. Sell
PRESIDENT
LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD

The L & N, like other railroads that share in the wartime marvel of transportation, is a product of The American Spirit. Actuated by that Spirit, our nation has grown strong because free men have been able to invest their savings in productive industry; labor has progressed under the right to bargain, individually or collectively; every person has been free to earn a just reward for energy, ability and initiative. It is that Spirit, nurtured on these freedoms, that holds the hope of a better world tomorrow . . . a tomorrow in which the L & N will continue to contribute to the certain development of the South.

Old Anti-Freeze Needs Corrosion Inhibitor Added

If you saved your anti-freeze solution from last winter, the War Production Board advises that you add an "inhibitor" to prevent motor corrosion before you put it back in your automobile, truck, or tractor radiator for the coming winter.

Inhibitors come in the form of a liquid or powder. They prevent rust and corrosion but do not add to the protective strength of the anti-freeze solution.

Should Test Old Anti-Freeze

Before an anti-freeze solution is put back into the radiator, it should be tested to determine what temperature it will protect against. If fresh anti-freeze is needed to strengthen the solution, it is beter, WPA says, that the same type of anti-freeze be added.

Adequate supplies of the permanent types of anti-freeze may be available only to motorists living in high altitudes. Motorists in other regions may add alcohol to strengthen their anti-freeze. Alcohol will mix satisfactorily with the permanent types of anti-freeze, although an accurate test reading of the protective value of the resultant mixture cannot be obtained.

If you have left your anti-freeze in the radiator since last winter, new inhibitor should be added, WPB advises, as it deteriorates after a season's use. The anti-freeze itself also loses its strength and should be tested to determine the amount of new anti-freeze that should be added along with the inhibitor.

Cooling System Needs Cleaning

Directions for use of inhibitors vary according to kind of inhibitor and anti-freeze solution, and motorists should follow instructions given by the manufacturers of the products they use.

The cooling system of the motor should be thoroughly cleaned before adding any anti-freeze or inhibitor, and if the anti-freeze has been stored in a container since last winter, any sediment should be carefully removed before the solution is put back into the cooling system.

Specialist Offers Suggestion In Tobacco Curing

R. M. Jeffery, research worker in tobacco curing at the Experiment Station at Lexington offers the following timely suggestions on curing the 1943 tobacco crop.

This curing season has been unusually dry in most parts of the state; consequently a considerable amount of tobacco has cured green, or mottled, especially where heat was used at times when it was not needed. Since the use of fires almost inevitably dries the air in the barn, they should not be used when the weather is dry unless the barn has been very badly overcrowded with tobacco. Tobacco which is mottled as a resut of too rapid curing, can be improved somewhat by allowing it to come in case for a time before it is stripped, but great care must be excerised to see that it does not get in too high case or stay in case too long. At least this treatment will result in a darker colored product than would have been obtained by proper curing in the first place but it will tend to make the color of the leaf more uniform, which will usually result in some improvement in prices.

"It is well to remember that the weather might turn wet at any time and fires may be necessary even after the curing is completed. The crop is not safe until it is sold."

Each year many of our good crops in the field are ruined in the barn. Tobacco is expected to bring one of the highest prices per pound on record according to the county agent's office. Every grower should attempt to cure his crop to the very best advantage possible.

Navy Recruiting Station, Room 8, Federal office Building, Covington, Kentucky, either by writing that station or by telephoning HI 2141 in Covington.

Third War Loan Drive Only Half Subscribed In Co.

Total paid subscriptions in the Third War Loan Drive in Boone County up to and including September 25 amounts to $331,883.80.

This is less than half of the county quota of $732,900.00 with only four days yet to go.

Reports from over the county indicate that subscriptions have slowed down and unless large and numerous subscriptions are made by Thursday of this week Boone County will have been "weighed in the balances and found wanting" as far as its quota is concerned.

As this is being writen only two precincts—Walton and Beaver have reached their quotas.

Boone County as a whole is falling down badly on "Backing The Attack" so far, and our support of our soldiers in the front lines by those on the home front is going to look very weak unless something unforseen happens by Thursday of this week.

A full report on the drive will appear next week.

Farmers Urged To Continue Soil Improvements

Boone County farmers are now faced with an opportune time to continue their soil improvement program and to produce more for the war effort according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. Land Prices have been advancing and while we can't probably buy more acres of land we can double the production per acre in many cases.

Timely and important jobs of soil and feed crop improvement that should and can be carried out NOW are:

1. The AAA has, in general terms, doubled the present soil building allowances through what is called a supplemental allowance for the last half of the year. This means the farmer can get as Grant of Aid in lieu of cash payment more phosphate, agricultural limestone and vetch seed. No experimental figures on the increased yields are needed. If in doubt look at your own fields where these practices have been carried out or ask your neighbors.

2. Seed your next year's grass crop now. Fall is the best time to seed grases. Seed may be high, but hay and pasture are higher. If in doubt about seedings contact the county agent's office.

3. Save hay and improve the productivity of your soil by seeding winter pasture or cover crops now. These include wheat, rye and vetch. The earlier the seeding the better.

4. Prepare for next year's high yield of high quality of tobacco (if tobacco to be grown again on the same land) by seeding your next year's land now to wheat or rye and vetch, adding AAA phosphate to the vetch and plan to manure this land early next spring previous to turning under. Act now—next month may be too late.

Mr. and Mrs. Hayden N. Callahan of Cincinnati accompanied by his sister, Mrs. E. W. VanWinkle and Mrs. Thelma McGuire was the guests of Mrs. Bessie Johnson of South Main Street Sunday.

Latest Developments In Freezer-Locker Plant Plans

The Advertiser has been advised by Mr. R. M. (Coke) Hall that satisfactory progress is being made in signing applicants for proposed FREEZER LOCKER to be located in Walton. The total number of signed applications has now reached the 150 mark with several more expected by the end of this week.

The Walton Town Board at a call meeting last Friday night granted a 90 day option on the East half of the city parking lot accross Main Street from Dixie Chevrolet for purpose of erecting suitable building if the construction of FREEZER LOCKER PLANT is approved by the War Production Board. The local business men that are financing the plant feel that the above location will be most convenient for farmers and out-of-town customers because of parking facilities and will also be well situated for the citizens of Walton proper.

At a recent meeting attended by Mr. E. G. Welch of University of Kentucky, Extension Department; Mr. C. A. Wicklund, Kenton Co. Agent; Mr. H. R. Forkner and Mr. O. D. Perkinson of County Agent's office in Boone County; Mr. J. T. Cochran, Gallatin County Agent; Mr. Folinger and Mr. Elliott of General Electric Company; Mr. John L. Vest, Mr. G. W. Baker, Mr. A. H. Gaines, Mr. C. F. Cleek, Mr. Walter D. Vest and R. M. Hall, plans for the plant were discussed. The above representatives of the three counties Boone, Kenton and Gallatin together with Extension Department of the University of Kentucky endorsed the plant and agreed to promote the plan for establishing a FREEZER LOCKER in this locality to serve the farmers and residents of this vicinity.

Mr. Hall urged that anyone interested in getting such a plant established in Northern Kentucky at an early date to contact their County Agent's office as soon as possible.

Gasoline Rations To Be Checked For Excessive Mileage

The most extensive review of gasoline rations ever conducted was launched this week by OPA, R. E. Brugh, chairman of the Boone County War Price and Rationing Board, revealed today.

Under the supervision of an OPA mileage rationing representative and an OPA organization department representative all of the supplemental, special, and non-highway rations now in effect will be checked for excessive mileage, R. E. Brugh said.

In cases where applicants received more mileage than they were entitled to, the OPA representative will make recommendations to the board either for revocation or reduction of the rations.

OPA has emphasized that the gasoline check-up should not be interpreted as a criticism of the rationing boards, R. E. Brugh said. He pointed out that the gasoline program has imposed such a burden on the boards that they have been unable to give every application as much attention as they would have liked—for reasons entirely beyond their control. He said many boards had asked OPA to check their gasoline applications.

The current gasoline and tire shortages make it imperative that automobile travel be restricted to essential and legitimate uses, the board chairman pointed out.

Allied Heavy Bombers Roam Over Italy To Halt Flow of Nazi Reinforcements; Major Shift in Army Command Heralds New Blows Against European Fortress

ITALY:
Rome Is Goal

Salerno's beaches won, American and British troops turned to the northward, with Rome their immediate goal.

Having failed to throw the Allies back into the sea at Salerno, Gen. Albert Kesselring's German forces withdrew toward the Naples area, where they were expected to put up another stiff rearguard action in the mountainous terrain.

After sharp, brief attacks on Allied shipping at Salerno, German aircraft disappeared from the skies, and American and British bombers roamed over Italy at will. Seeking to halt the flow of German re-enforcements to the south, Allied planes ripped railroads and highways.

Reports from Naples told of the Nazis' destruction of the city, indicating that the German high command intends to ruin every facility that might be of use to occupying Allied forces.

Flanking the Italian mainland, the islands of Sardinia and Corsica fell to Allied troops. In Corsica, Italian soldiers joined with "Free French" units in fighting to oust Nazi elements.

RUSSIA:
New Lines

With the Dnieper river in sight, the end of a long German retreat along the whole central and southern front in Russia neared. It is along the entire 750 miles of the broad, winding river that the Nazis evidently intend to make a final stand in Russia. Should the Germans fail to hold the Dnieper line, they would be compelled to fall back into Europe itself.

In the north, the Russians drove past Smolensk, threatening the Nazis' communications with Finland, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. In this sector, the Reds were only 115 miles from the old Polish border.

Only in the extreme south did the Germans hold the Russians at long arm's length from the Dnieper. Evidently, the Nazis were bitterly resisting in the area so as to allow the escape of many German troops in the Crimean peninsula, which connects with the Russian mainland in this section.

Generals Form Union

Calling upon Germany to overthrow Hitler and establish a government having the confidence of the people and the strength to bring about peace, 100 former Nazi generals and other officers hooked up with the "Free German" group organized by Russia.

Captured at Stalingrad, the former Nazi commanders appealed to Germany to ". . . end the senseless, futile war" which "might any day cause a national catastrophe." Germany today faces a worse isolation than in 1918, they contended.

Addition of the former Nazi militarists to the "Free German" committee undoubtedly was for the assurance of order it might promise in case of Germany's internal collapse. Russia's creation of the "Free German" committee has been seen as a move to incorporate the always potentially strong German nation into its own European order, independent of Anglo-American planning.

ALLIED CHIEF:
Marshall Named

Congress was working itself into a pother over rumors of Gen. George C. Marshall's removal as American chief of staff when it was reported that he has been named commander- in- chief of all American-British forces throughout the world.

Gen. George C. Marshall

According to the rumors that threw Washington into ferment, Marshall had clashed with British military authorities over the opening of a second front in Europe.

Report of his appointment as commander-in-chief of all Allied forces with control over the British army, however, seemed to spike the rumors. As American chief of staff, General Marshall was in charge of all army planning, of operations and supply, and his new post undoubtedly was to carry the same responsibilities.

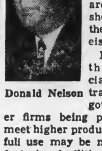
Against Island Hopping

Even as air-borne Australian troops landed in northeastern New Guinea in another daring move to cut off the Japanese from supply bases, Gen. Douglas MacArthur reemphasized the pattern of his strategic battle-plans in the Southwest Pacific.

Assailing the principle of "island hopping"—that is, taking one island after the other—General MacArthur declared: "Key points must, of course, be taken, but a wise choice of such will obviate the need for storming the mass of islands now in enemy possession . . . (which) is not my idea of how to end the war as soon and as cheaply as possible."

Replying to talk he would be shelved, Gen. MacArthur said: "I have no personal military ambitions whatsoever, and am perfectly content in such role as may be prescribed for me."

MANPOWER:
War Needs



Testifying before the senate military affairs committee on the question of drafting dads, Gen. George C. Marshall and Adm. Ernest J. King declared they were interested only in meeting the services' quota for 1,200,000 men by the end of the year.

According to the war manpower commission, 446,000 fathers will have to be inducted if the services' demands are to be met. Marshall and King left the problem of raising the men up to the WMC, but warned against lowering physical standards in reclassifying 4-F's, or of taking childless married men over 38.

In leading the fight against immediate induction of fathers, Senator Burton K. Wheeler sought to establish that production was exceeding requirements in certain lines, resulting in a waste of manpower which could be used to better advantage in other industries behind schedule. Wheeler also sought to probe claims that certain employers were overstaffing their concerns and raising costs to assure larger profits on contracts.

Distribute Production

While congress stewed over the whole manpower question, Chairman Donald Nelson of the war production board issued a directive ordering all war agencies not to place contracts in areas where labor shortages exist if they can be filled elsewhere.

Donald Nelson

In this connection, the WPB also declared that war contracts should be negotiated, with smaller firms being paid premiums to meet higher production costs, so that full use may be made of all manufacturing facilities.

In connection with curtailing employment in industries whose production exceeds needs, WPB announced that hereafter such employment would be cut in communities where there was a scarcity of labor in other essential lines.

POST-WAR PEACE:
Vote to Cooperate

The question of nationalism and internationalism came to the front in the house of representatives and both sides came off with honors even.

With congress' adoption of the Fulbright resolution, the internationalists won a point through the measure's provision calling for America's co-operation in joining with other nations in preserving world peace by any seemingly proper means.

On the other hand, the nationalists won a point, too, through the resolution's stipulation that congress must approve any plan for such American co-operation.

The bill went to the senate, where it faced strong opposition on the grounds that the house was trying to cut in on the senate's constitutional privilege of advising and consenting to foreign treaties.

WHEAT:
CCC Rations Stocks

Tightening of transportation is complicating the Commodity Credit corporation's distribution of its wheat stocks for feed. The same difficulty has interfered with the CCC's program for purchasing 15 million bushels of Canadian wheat weekly.

Because of the difficulties encountered, CCC has rationed wheat to buyers, with big operators formerly ordering 165,000 bushels being cut to 50,000.

As of September 11, the CCC reported, 57,483,457 bushels of new wheat were held in loan, compared with 144,038,388 at the same time last year. Some 1942 wheat also is being held in loan. CCC efforts to call these loans to replenish its stocks, however, probably would result in farmers offering the grain on the open market for sale above the loan price.

New Synthetic Tube

Add to scientific wonders this synthetic inner tube, called marvinol, and made from a new rubber-to-plastic. According to the manufacturers, the material in the tube is non-porous, eliminating the usual leakage of two pounds of air weekly in ordinary tubes. In addition, the new tube is fully reclaimable in case of a puncture or blowout.

U. S. NAVY:
Greatest in History

With 613 warships and 18,269 planes, the U. S. navy ranks as the greatest in world history. Since 1940, 333 combatant vessels and 15,567 planes of all types have been added in a multi-billion dollar construction program.

In addition to the warships, Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox disclosed that 1,274 mine and patrol craft have been built, along with 12,964 landing vessels and numerous other smaller boats.

Since the outbreak of war, the U. S. has lost 1 battleship, 4 aircraft carriers, 9 cruisers, 32 destroyers and 12 submarines, or a total of 58 warships.

FARM:
Manpower Wastage

Approximately 1,300,000 farm families are prevented from producing at their maximum because of a lack of financing, James G. Patton, president of the National Farmers union, declared.

Because they cannot get the credit for purchase of equipment and other facilities, Patton said, these families are producing below their level and thus wasting badly needed manpower. To help them increase production, Patton suggested creation of a billion dollar loan program.

Another source of manpower wastage, Patton said, was the freezing of farm labor in most of the nation's 3,000 counties. Under provisions of public law 45, Patton pointed out, federal funds for recruiting and transporting farm labor from one area to another are advanced only on approval of the county agent.

POST-WAR:
Spending Seen

Sixty-four per cent of the people interviewed by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce plan to buy one or more major articles in the six months following the end of the war.

During this period, they intend to spend three billion dollars on automobiles; over one billion dollars on household appliances, chiefly radios and kitchen mixers; over 700 million dollars on household furnishings, and seven billion dollars on new homes.

INDIA AND U. S.

Despite the Churchill visit and the impending campaign in Burma, conditions inside India still remain one sore spot where Anglo-American relations, frank and friendly as they are, could stand some cleaning up.

All of the President's special advisers have brought home more or less the same reports. They include: Laughlin Currie, member of the White House staff; ex-Undersecretary of War Louis Johnson; Special Ambassador Billy Phillips.

Latest evidence of Indian sore spots is a report to Leo Crowley, new Economic Warfare administrator from his New Delhi representative, John Fischer, who writes:

"The government of India, the British army, and many Indian businessmen view the opening of an OEW (Economic Warfare) office here with frank and deep-rooted suspicion. This suspicion is not directed at us alone; it falls on all American representatives in India.

"The American Mission was established here in 1941 in the face of considerable reluctance on the part of the government of India. (Previously the United States had not been permitted even a consulate in New Delhi.) The OWI, OSS and even lend-lease representatives have told us that they have been received here with open misgivings—and in the case of the first two agencies, sometimes with hostility. Before our arrival, the government of India raised a number of questions regarding our mission with the American Mission.

"We have reason to believe that our movements have been under close observation, both here and in England, and that surveillance is likely to continue.

Reasons for Coolness.

"There seem to be two main reasons for this attitude," Fischer reported to Crowley.

"1. The fear that American representatives may send to Washington, through channels not subject to British censorship, information concerning the internal situation in India. This, the government of India seems to believe, might stimulate American sympathy for the Nationalist movement and criticism of the government's ineffective administrative techniques.

"2. Fear of American post-war commercial competition. This concern seems to be shared alike by the British and many large Indian businessmen. It has been so pronounced that the mission thought it expedient, shortly before our arrival, to assure the government that OEW activity in India is in no way concerned with trade promotion.

"To offset the cool attitude of the government of India, the American Mission has received us with a helpfulness and kindliness which has exceeded expectations . . . we are confident that despite all this we can manage fairly well."

TO RELAX RATIONING OF FARM MACHINERY

Agricultural officials have been closeted for several days working on an announcement which will be good news to farmers. They are planning to relax the rationing of farm machinery.

Relaxation will take two forms. One will be to permit farm machinery companies more latitude in distributing their products to different parts of the country. The other will be to take certain machines definitely off the ration list.

Although plans are not quite complete, it is probable that most farm machinery will be unrationed from now on except tractors, combines, hay bailers, beet lifters and similar mechanized equipment. In general, tractor implements will be taken off the list, though tractors will stay on.

It will still be necessary for farmers to go to their ration boards to get permission to buy certain farm machinery, but this will be only for the purpose of making sure that they are legitimate farmers and really need the equipment. The old system of strict rationing on most farm machinery will go by the boards.

Hitherto, farm implement companies have been required to distribute their products equally throughout the United States, so that some counties where little wheat is raised have received as many binders as counties in the middle of the wheat belt. Or in some cases, too much corn machinery has been sent to counties where little corn is raised, while corn belt counties have been slighted.

The new order will permit farm implement companies to use more discretion in order to avoid inefficient distribution.

Nation to Be Active Factor In Post-War Peace Plans

Majority of American People Ask Participation in International Organization To Maintain Harmony.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building
Washington, D. C.

Slowly the pattern of America's post-war plans are taking shape, but only the pattern.

When congress returned, it was evident that no matter how much disagreement there might be as to the details of the role the United States will play in the post-war world, the people have registered one idea: they want to take part in some kind of an international organization to maintain peace.

The same opinion turned up in the conversation of three members of congress of widely differing political sentiments with whom I talked shortly after they returned. Speaker Sam Rayburn told me that the one phrase which received the most applause in the speeches he made in the Southwest was when he said that the United States must do a man's job for peace.

Two leading Republican senators expressed the same idea, namely, that "the people seem to be of one mind" that America must join in some kind of international effort after the war to maintain peace.

The disagreements in congress are chiefly a difference in degree and represent a discussion, for the most part, over details that nobody expects congress to decide in advance anyhow.

Of course, there are two things which make for lack of harmony; one is the natural desire of each political party to criticize the other in a campaign year; the other is the effort of small groups to get over their own particular ideas.

Secretary of State Hull, in his speech of September 12, made it plain that the administration was in favor of an international organization which would agree to use force to maintain peace—implying that the United States would offer its armed forces in collaboration with other nations to stop aggression. He went further on the subject than any official so far but there has been a feeling on the part of many members of congress that the people would support such a policy.

Pooling of Resources

Meanwhile, the public has gradually come to the realization that Winston Churchill, as the king's first minister with plenary powers, and President Roosevelt, as commander-in-chief and, therefore, with similar authority, have agreed that the United States and Britain will pool their military resources not only until the fighting ends, but until the emergency is ended. They will do this merely by continuing the committee of joint chiefs of staff.

They have made it plain that they consider the emergency, or as an official spokesman for the United States described it, "a period of transition," will not end until the last peace treaties are signed. In other words, the United States and Great Britain intend, as long as the emergency exists, to take part in an organization to establish and maintain the peace by means of what amounts to a military alliance between the two nations.

Prime Minister Churchill was ready to sign a written agreement which would include Britain's pledge to remain our ally and continue the war with us until Japan was beaten —that much he told the newsmen—and he added, the President had said it was not necessary, that his word was good enough. Presumably, the written agreement would have included the continuation of the joint committee of the chiefs of staff, too. But written or unwritten, such a pact now exists.

It is, therefore, clear that the President intends, if he remains in office, to maintain an interim arrangement which will keep this country an active factor in world affairs to the point where its policies will be supported by military action. This will be of indefinite length, as Churchill put it, until it can be shown that a better arrangement, including all nations, can be found to supplant it.

In one sense, therefore, it is less important what decision the congress or the administration makes right now as to its foreign policy since there will be plenty of time for the people to become fully acquainted with the whole situation during the "transition period" when two of the strongest nations remain united. The important thing, of course, is to obtain the co-operation of the third most powerful nation, Russia.

And that is what is on the fire right now. Until we know a little more about Russia's views and intentions, it will be impossible to make a detailed plan for the post-war world.

Battle of Italy
Beginning of End

As I write these lines, the startled moon has just slipped behind a jagged curtain of clouds, like a transport sliding under the protecting cloak of a smoke screen.

That comparison leaps to my mind because all day I have been following, as you have and as closely as either of us could, the progress of the greatest military undertaking which an American army has attempted in this war—the battle of Italy. For the battle of Italy is the storming of the very portals of the Reich, the outer rim, it is true, but nonetheless, the first breastworks of Hitler's inner fortress.

Here, for the first time, American soldiers, hardened on the barsh sands of Afrlca and the cruel hills of Sicily, meet the guardsmen of the Nazi citadel. Not a bi-colored army, diluted by a half-hearted ally, Italy, but dogged German fighters defending the gateway to their own, their native land.

The end of the beginning has ended, the beginning of the end has begun. And we who have watched every sign and every signal as the curtain between what we thought and what we knew was lifted, realize how little we and the world can guess of the inner and complicated workings of this great war machine.

As the armies of the Allies attack the enemy citadel—the leaders of the Allies, Roosevelt and Churchill, plan a new edifice.

The invasion of Sicily and the invasion of Italy were planned at Casablanca where, for 24 hours, the few newsmen who were permitted to know, kept the secret of the meeting itself. Beside the historic waters of the St. Lawrence, in the citadel at Quebec, the marching orders were sealed while we newsmen waited, blinded and deafened to all but the most general ideas.

What are those marching orders? Some other startled moon will tell.

Civilian Defense
Proves Its Worth

As Germany begins the defense of her inner fortress and the once-feared Luftwaffe has been converted from an offensive to a defensive machine the problem of keeping up the morale of Civilian Defense in this country is a difficult one. It would be foolhardy to lie down on the job now for history has shown that frequently fierce and bitter conflicts grow out of victories and until the last shot is fired and after that, it isn't safe to desert the ramparts.

Recently the value of civilian defense training was proved in a manner which received very little recognition outside of the immediate vicinity. When the Congressional Limited, the crack train that runs between New York and Washington, was wrecked in Philadelphia, when the Twentieth Century Limited, another crack train between Chicago and New York, was wrecked, and when a hotel burned in Houston, Texas, the civilian defense organization proved its mettle. On all three occasions, invaluable service was rendered by these unselfish men and women who have so long answered mock alarms and gone on duty for practice drills.

It was definitely shown that in the case of the wreck of the Congressional Limited and in the Houston fire lives were actually saved by the defense workers. In Philadelphia a group of air raid wardens meeting near the scene of the wreck were the first to arrive on the scene.

In a short time 7,500 trained workers were at work assisting police and helping the rescue. So effectively did they handle the traffic that in spite of the great crowds, lanes were kept open so that all injured persons not actually pinned in the wreck had been removed to hospitals within 35 or 40 minutes.

A LONG mirror with a table at each side makes an ideal place to dress. Here you have it with the old mirror from the buffet described recently. The mirror is turned end-wise and the irregularities of the frame covered with cream colored muslin curtains of unbleached muslin hung from a rod attached to the picture molding.

But that is not the last of the old buffet. The turned legs are here made into lamps. The base of each is a square piece of one-inch lumber which is screwed through the center to the largest end of the leg piece. An electric fixture such as is often used in candle sticks is then inserted in a hole bored in the other end. The lamp shades and the butter-tub stool are covered with the cream colored muslin.

Sheep Parasite Control Program

A new intestinal parasite control program, thru use of Phenothiazine, is being planned according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. Control on intestianl parasites is one of the most important jobs in sheep production.

The new program is simple. The entire flock will be drenched with Phenothiazine in November and again in the spring as soon as the lambing season is complete. Beginning in June and following thru until November, the sheep are given access to a salt mixture consisting of one part Phenothiazine to nine parts of salt.

If tapeworms are present, two treatments of the combination Bluestone-Black-Leaf 40 treatment are given during the summer months.

Two difficulties are encountered in the above treatment. One is the price and the other is the form of treatment used. Present prices of retail packages are from $1.50 to $1.75 per pound which is too high for use on large size flocks. Dealers can stock material in bulk and by buying quanities, can sell Phenothiazine at around $1.00 per pound.

The second problem is the form of material to use. The drench form needs a special dissolving agent while the powder form may be easily mixed with salt. The tablet form may be too hard to dissolve readily in the sheep's stomach.

State's 4-H'ers To Take Active Part In Fire Prevention Week.

Through their National Farm Safety Program, practically all 4-H Club members in the nation's largest volunteer youth organization—which now totals 1,700,000 rural boys and girls—are being urged to take active part in the 1943 Fire Prevention Week, which will be held Oct. 3-9, by Presidential proclamation.

That the 4-H'ers are helping to reduce the annual farm fire losses of 3,500 lives and millions of dollars in now irreplaceable buildings and equipment vitally essential to the war program, is reflected in the clubbers' records of achievement in the current National 4-H Farm Safety Activity.

Among the aims of the program are to impress others to become safety conscious to locate fire hazards and correct them, and to assist in providing or installing simple home fire-fighting equipment in or near all farm buildings. The youthful workers have made big strides in carrying out these objectives since the activity's inception last January, by giving talks, demonstrations and playlets on accident and fire prevention at local meetings, by inspecting home premises for accident and fire hazards, and conducting community-wide safety campaigns. Their safety activities have called for extraordinary efforts this year, due to the large number of inexperienced workers on farms.

Records of all participants in this activity are being considered for special recognition in the form of county, state and national awards provided by the Mennen Company. They include medals to county blue award groups, and a $100 War Bond to the outstanding safety champion in each state. An all-expense trip to the 22nd National 4-H Club Congress, Chicago, Nov. 28-Dec. 1, and a $200 scholarship also will be presented to each of the four members of the national blue award group selected from the state winners.

From where I sit ...

by Joe Marsh

At Jeb Crowell's the other day, we were havin' a glass of beer or two and talkin' about the kind of world there'd be when Peace came.

"Hear they'll have trans-Atlantic airplanes flyin' regular as taxi service," says Ed Carey.

"Yep," says Will Frost, "and television and plastic cars and air-conditioned homes and super-duper highways."

Finally, Doc Mitchell chimes in. "You know," he says, "we're talkin' about the future in terms of luxuries—like air-conditioned houses and television.

"But what really will shape tomorrow's world is what goes on in men's own hearts . . . like tolerance and understanding."

And from where I sit, Doc's right. Whether it's tolerance of another's politics or respect for a neighbor's right to enjoy a glass of beer occasionally, tolerance is a mighty good foundation for a peacetime world.

Boone Co. Farmers Do Super Job.

During the last two weeks, more than 50 of the community leaders in various projects were visited, according to O. D. Perkinson, Assistant County Agent. Each leader has put forth some special effort, in producing a little more or to make something a little better in order to help the war effort. In many cases the financial gain will not be as great as it would have been, had they planted something besides a food crop. Many farmers will finish feeding out a bunch of hogs on a very narrow margain of profit. In ordinary times they might say the return would not justify the time and money involved.

The dairy farmers are getting remarkable high production from their herds, considering the scarcity and high prices of feeds. We are afraid this production cannot be maintained unless there is an adjustment made between cost of feed and price of milk.

The regular program of farming has been carried out in good shape in the face of labor shortage and adverse weather conditions.

NICHOLSON

"Our sufficiency is of God." Prayer brings peace to the soul and power to the life, christians are not exempt from biter trials, but spiritual strength is given which enables us to press on. The life of faith is the only life that helps us to look up and see brightness beyond the darkness.

"If I have helped a troubled soul, I shall feel repaid a thousand fold."

The kind thoughtfulness of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Hanna in giving roses while their fragrance is inhaled, gleams out brightly in the drab monotony of our life and is most deeply appreciated.

Seaman Dick Bolen, young sailor son of Mr. and Mrs. Bolen pleasantly passed his recent leave at home.

Deeply appreciated was the recent kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Myron V. Stephens of near Piner.

Most heartily do we thank Mrs. Harry Fisk for a lovely tray of dinner consisting of fried chicken, sliced tomatoes, hot rolls and apple pie.

On Sunday afternoon Mrs. Vincent Stephenson, Mrs. John Schmidt and daughter, Miss Ruth, attended he dedication of the Kenton County Honor Roll on which was inscribed the names of 900 gallant youths in service of our country. An interesting program was rendered on the spacious lawn of the Court House. En-route home they paid a pleasant call.

Awards For Canning Offered Youngsters In Farming Contest.

Kentucky girl and boy farmers participating in the scholarship program of the National Junior Vegetable Growers Association are eligible to complete for four awards totaling $100 to be given for outstanding achievement in vegetable canning, it was announced today by Professor Grant B. Snyder, of Massachusetts Sate College, Amherst, Mass., advisory chairman of the association.

"These awards of $25 each from a fund provided for the association by the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company should be of particular interest to the much greater number of farm girls working in the program this year," Snyder said," as almost all of them are canning a part of their harvest."

Boy members as well as girls are being encouraged to create the "extra stockpile of home-canned food" recommended by the Secretary of Agriculture, so as to release more of the commercially-caned produce for war needs.

Prizes will be based upon quantity and quality of vegetables canned this year, and are in addition to the regular scholarship awards of the farm production and marketing program.

Farmers Face Opportunity For Soil Improvement.

Boone County farmers, despite increased war production, face an opportunity of soil improvement through fuller use of the revised agricultural conservation association Grant of Aid program according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent.

The soil building allowance has been increased and the supplemental allowance for the last half of the year means that the allowance has been practically doubled.

No farmer can profitably over look investigating the new conservation Grant of Aid program in which farmers may secure in lieu of cash payment the increased amounts of phosphate, limestone or vetch seed. This increase is larger than most farmers realize. Wonderful increased crop yields have resulted from the use of these materials and the ACP is the cheapest source of supply.

The smart thing for most farmers appears to be, is, to overlook all cash benefits payments and accept 100% of the alowance in grant of aid materials. Applications should be filed at the county AAA office or through the AAA committeemen.

Booby Trap Detector

In the snow, in the sand, on the beaches, on the roads, in the woods, everywhere the Axis soldiers hide "booby traps" to slow the movement of oncoming fighting men of the United Nations. The detector does the same work on land as the mine sweeper does at sea.

Like buying War Bonds, the soldier operating the detectors will never know just how much they have aided in the success of their campaign, but he knows his work is necessary and must be accomplished. If more Americans on the home front will come to realize this, the success of our War Bond campaigns will be assured.

RED CROSS HEALTH WORK

Dr. H. F. Mann and Miss Elizabeth Lowry have just conducted immunization clinics against smallpox and diphtheria at Walton and Verona Schools. After a very small percent of children who prefered to go to their own physicians to get their vacinations.

Walton will be practically 100% inoculated against small pox. A considerable number of diphtheria immunizations were also done. Verona is not far behind Walton in their immunizations too. Prof's Baker and Chipman are interested and really through their efforts the clinics were made a success. Dr. Mann has also been generous with his valuable time.

A High School Class in Home Nursing is being started this week at Walton, with an enrollment of twenty one. We are onl ysupposed to take twenty in a class, but shall try to work this out some way, so as not to leave out just one girl who is interested and anxious to take the course. This class will meet each Monday and for lack of time on school days have some practical demonstrations on Saturdays.

Miss Katherine Scott is sponsor of the class and has done excelent work in stimulating the interest and getting the class together.

There was good attendance at the X-ray Clinic at Florence on the 22nd. Those assisting in the clinic and transportation for patients were Dr. S. B. Nunnelley, Mr. R. V. Wartime Lighting Suggestions

HOW TO GET MORE LIGHT FROM YOUR PRESENT EQUIPMENT

Keep Bulbs, Diffusing Bowls and Enclosing Globes Clean

You're paying for light you're not getting when dust and dirt accumulate on lighting equipment. Light meter tests show that simply by cleaning bulbs, diffusing bowls and enclosing globes you can increase light output as much as 30 to 50 per cent. Unscrew bulbs and wipe them off with a damp cloth. Remove diffusing bowls, enclosing globes and other lighting glassware and wash in warm, soapy water. Be sure to dry all lighting equipment thoroughly before using again.

OTHER WAYS TO CONSERVE LIGHT

1. Keep shade linings light. Clean or brush regularly. Repaint or reline dark-colored paper or parchment shades.
2. Sit close enough to the lamp to get all the help it can give your eyes.
3. Avoid direct glare from lamp bulbs by using shades deep enough and wide enough.
4. Arrange furniture so one lamp can serve two people. But be sure lamp is not too far away from either person.
5. Have eyes examined regularly by a competent eyesight specialist.
6. Turn off lamps not in use. Lamp bulbs use critical materials... Make them last longer.

Electricity ...is vital to war production. Use all you need but don't waste it just because it's cheap and isn't rationed.

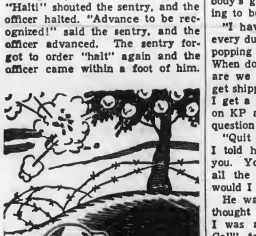
See Here, Private Hargrove!

by Marion Hargrove

W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: Private Marion Hargrove, former editorial employee of a North Carolina newspaper, has been inducted into the army and is receiving his basic training at Fort Bragg. He has been classified as a cook. This classification together with a more than usual amount of KP duty have caused him to become pretty well acquainted with the Company kitchen. Private Hargrove has become rather well versed in the many angles of "goldbricking" and other army pastimes. He claims, however, that "shooting the breeze" or the "bull session" is the soldier's favorite recreation. At this stage of training some of the boys are experts in the art. As we pick up the story he is discussing this.

CHAPTER IX



By this time, the evening bull sessions have worn themselves into a very definite routine. If Corporal Ussery is there, he lectures on how he'd run the Army; if it's Private Terrence Clarkin, he tells how he used to direct the intricate traffic affairs of Radio City Music Hall when he was assistant chief doorman there. Unless Private Henri Gelders is stopped, he'll start a violent argument among the butchers over how to cut a steak.

McGlaufin will talk for hours about the beauties of the lakes in Minnesota. Grafenstein will deliver discourses on how he would run the Wisconsin football team; Pappas, about Alabama's Crimson Tide. Maciejewski will sermonize on the utter baseness and treachery of womankind.

Lately, however, the sessions have come more and more under the away of Private Merton Hulce, a mad Irish lad from Muskegon, Michigan. Private Hulce apparently didn't stop at kissing the Blarney Stone. He must have stolen half of it to carry with him.

Hulce's chief topic of conversation is his mother's fabulous family, the Smiths, all of whom seem to get enmeshed in every war that comes along. His grandfather, who was a captain in the Coast Guard at the outbreak of the last war, was transferred to duty at guarding munitions dumps and such for the duration of the war.

According to Hulce, one of the munitions guards with his grandfather's detail was approached late one night by an officer of the guard. "Halt!" shouted the sentry, and the officer halted. "Advance to be recognized!" said the sentry, and the officer advanced. The sentry forgot to order "halt" again and the officer came within a foot of him.

In the midst of this fiery hell he saw a peach tree with peaches growing on it.

Suddenly the officer reached out and snatched the rifle from the guard's hand.

This was an exceedingly uncomfortable position for the guard, especially in that time of war. He might even have been sentenced to death. The officer stood there just looking at the guard for fully a minute. "What would you have done," he asked in a terrible voice, "if an enemy had got your gun like that?"

The guard trembled for a moment and recovered. "I would have snatched it back, sir," he said, "like THAT!" And the officer stood there, empty-handed.

Hulce's grandfather, who told that story, is now about sixty-five, his grandson says. He was asked to come back into the Navy three months ago as a captain. Being a Smith, he's back. With him in the armed forces today are two of his sons and two of his grandsons.

Merton had two uncles in the last war, both of whom fared exceedingly well when you take a practical view of it. Neither tired himself out. The first crossed the ocean nine times playing the clarinet in a troop ship's band. The Germans torpedoed the boat once and the holes in the side were stuffed with mattresses. Hulce's uncle rode back into port, still playing his clarinet. That was the goldbricking uncle.

The other uncle served as a kaypee on the trip across. Carrying a tray around the deck, he was heckled several times by a person he soon grew to loathe. Eventually the Irish wrath of the Smiths rose to boiling point. Uncle Smith lifted the tray high overhead and wrapped it around the heckler's neck. He spent the rest of the war in confinement.

Then there was the cousin, grandma's sister's boy. Serving in the front-line trenches, he grew suddenly hungry one morning. Looking out of the trench, he saw a peach tree growing there in the midst of the fiery hell, and there were still peaches on it. He tried to sneak into the tree, but the enemy's bullets found him. He was carried behind the lines. Just as the stretcher bearers laid him down, an enemy shell exploded in the center of their little group and none of them were ever seen again.

This happened at exactly ten o'clock on the morning of November 11, 1918—one hour before the Armistice was signed.

Next to the Bugler, I suppose the battery clerk has the goldbrickin'est job in the battery. You could cut his pay to ten dollars a month and he'd still be defrauding the government.

Just watch the battery clerk for a while and you start wondering why he's in the Army, when he's so evidently cut out to fit the leaning end of a WPA shovel. While the rest of the battery is earning its daily bread with sweat, the battery clerk sits in the orderly room hob-nobbing with the powers that be, typing the daily worklist with original spellings for all the names and wondering how long it is until lunchtime.

Our battery clerk is a beardless youth named Howard Miller. I tripped over him yesterday evening on my way back from a hard day's work and stopped to chew the conversational fat.

"Junior," I asked him, "how does your conscience feel about this six-day goldbricking schedule every week? Don't you feel a twinge on payday?"

Corporal Miller made a move to draw himself up indignantly, but decided it wasn't worth the effort. "If you're insinuating that I don't have to work you're off your bean, sonny. I do two or three times as much work as you happiness boys."

I yawned and sat down. "After listening to Ussery shooting off his mouth fifteen hours a day, I can take yours. Go on with your fantastic story."

"Boy," said Miller, "the responsibility is enough to kill an ordinary man. I'm a one-man information bureau for the whole battery. I have to know who everybody is, where everybody is, where everybody's going and how long he's going to be there.

"I have to know the answer to every dumb question you guys come popping up with. Where's my mail? When do I get my furlough? Where are we going to be sent when we get shipped out of here? Why didn't I get a weekend pass? Why was I on KP again today? Every sort of question you could imagine!"

"Quit popping your guns, laddie," I told him. "That's no grind for you. You use the same answer on all the questions: 'How the hell would I know?'"

He was quiet for a while and I thought he had gone to sleep again. I was all primed to hum "Chow Call" to wake him up, when he stirred and sighed heavily.

"All right," I prompted him, "so you're the one-man information bureau. So what do you do in the line of actual work?"

"Work!" he shouted. "That's what I do—work! Why, I have to write all the letters and keep all the files and keep duty rosters up to date! I have to make thousands of rosters of the battery every month—"

"That," I suggested, "should take at least two or three hours every day. What do you do to while away the other tedious hours of the day?"

He was quiet again for about a minute. Then he arose. "I've got a pretty hard day ahead of me tomorrow, Hargrove," he said. "I hope you won't mind if you excuse myself. You have to get plenty of sleep when you have a job like mine."

"When you have a job like yours," I growled, "you can sleep night and day."

The top sergeant stuck his head out of the supply room and beckoned with his arm. "Come 'ere, you!"

I dropped my stable broom in the battery street and hastened toward him, as one always does when summoned by the top kick.

"Well, Private Hargrove," he said, "this is a red-letter day for you."

"You mean you're going to let me go out and drill like the other fellows?"

"Noooo, Private Hargrove," he said. "I mean I'm going to let you turn in all your equipment. You are no longer to be a rookie, Private Hargrove. You are going to be an important working cog in the great wheel of national defense. You are leaving us.

"What's the deal?" I asked. "Where do I go and what do I do?"

The sergeant chuckled and leaned back in his chair. He sighed ecstatically twice. "Would you really like to know, son, or would you rather put it off as long as you can?"

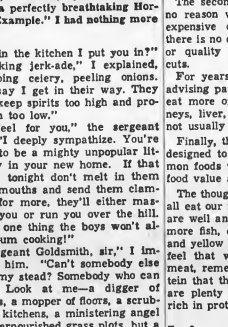
"Well," I said thankfully, "you can't be sending me out as a cook, because I don't know anything about cooking."

The sergeant sat back and drummed happily on the table.

"Great gods!" I shouted. "I'm not going to be a cannoneer, am I?"

"No, Private Hargrove," he said after another long pause, "you're not going to be a cannoneer. We're going to give you a job where you can use your natural talents."

There was a distinctly sadistic tone in his voice. I waited.



"You're going to be my first cook, Hargrove," he said fondly. "Not just a plain cook. A head cook! A king in your own kitchen, a man of responsibility. Ain't that lovely?"

"You can't do this to me!" I roared, when my breath returned. "It's against every decent human law! I don't know anything about cooking! I want to be a cannoneer!"

Sergeant Goldsmith's eyes wandered guiltlessly to the ceiling. "You don't know anything about cooking, huh? That's bad, boy, that's bad! Why, you're supposed to be on shift right now."

"Sergeant," I said, "I couldn't fry an egg right now if it had directions on the package."

"You're in the cooks' battery, ain't you? You've been going to cooking school and you've been sent to a kitchen for all these weeks. You're supposed to be graduated any day now. What have you been

"Son," he said, "you're going to make a perfectly breathtaking Horrible Example." I had nothing more to say.

doing in the kitchen I put you in?"

"Making jerk-ade," I explained, "chopping celery, peeling onions. They say I get in their way. They say I keep spirits too high and production too low."

"I feel for you," the sergeant said. "I deeply sympathize. You're going to be a mighty unpopular little boy in your new home. If that supper tonight don't melt in them boys' mouths and send them clamoring for more, they'll either massacre you or run you over the hill. That's one thing the boys won't allow—bum cooking!"

"Sergeant Goldsmith, sir," I implored him. "Can't somebody else go in my stead? Somebody who can cook? Look at me—a digger of ditches, a mopper of floors, a scrubber of kitchens, a ministering angel to undernourished grass plots, but a cook never! You don't know what you're doing to me!"

"Son," he said, "you're going to make a perfectly breath-taking Horrible Example!"

Then he rose and walked back into the supply room. "Thomas," he said, "check in this yardbird's equipment."

Sergeant Israel looked up from his Form Thirty-Two records. "Don't he like his equipment?"

"Check in everything but his clothing," the top kick said. "Get a truck to take him to Headquarters Battery, FARC."

Sergeant Thomas W. Israel looked up in faint amazement. I looked in sheer bewilderment.

"They had to figure some way to stop his cooking career and save the morale of some battery we would get him as a cook," said Sergeant Goldsmith. "So he's being palmed off to Center Headquarters as a public relations man."

The word "buddy" hasn't come into popularity yet in the new army. I suppose that if there were such things, Maury Sher would be mine. Sher and I occupied adjoining bunks when I was in Battery A.

Private Sher is a smart and likable Jewish boy from Columbus, Ohio. He went to school at Southern California, until he learned that all the world's knowledge doesn't come from the intellectual invalids who usually teach the 8:30 class. Then he went back to Columbus, had an idea patented, and built himself a restaurant shaped like a champagne glass.

Came the fateful Sixteenth of October and Sher enrolled for the Selective Service System. His application was accepted last July and, since he had been the successful proprietor of a restaurant, he was classified as a promising student for the Army cooking course.

The two of us got together when he was sent to the Replacement Center here. We started an acquaintance when I topped all his Jewish jokes and began teaching him how to speak Yiddish. I was attracted by his native intelligence, his pleasant personality, his sense of humor, the similarity of his likes and dislikes to mine, his subscription to PM, his well-stocked supply of cigarettes (my brand), and the cookies he constantly received from home.

So we became more or less constant companions. We made the rounds here together, went to Charlotte together, made goo-goo eyes at the same waitress in Fayetteville, and swapped valuable trade secrets in goldbricking.

TO YOUR Good Health

by DR. JAMES W. BARTON

MEAT AND PROTEINS

While the rationing of sugar, butter, tea and coffee caused considerable dismay, the rationing of meat has caused more concern than any other single food. Most food experts will agree that not only is meat an important food from the standpoint of nutrition or body building, but in the minds and the digestion of the majority of us, nothing quite satisfies the stomach and the appetite as does meat.

Dr. Barton

What then is likely to happen to the health of the individual and the nation if we cannot obtain all the meat we need? The reason that meat is so important to health and strength is because of its richness in protein and the protein of animal food—meat—is richer and is more completely digested and absorbed into the blood than is protein from vegetables.

However, there are two points that make us more satisfied to eat protein as furnished in fish and eggs (other animal proteins) and the proteins in vegetables, especially peas and beans. In Hygeia, the health magazine, Phoebe Mayo Walters, Corona, Calif., explains that while it is the protein in meat that is necessary to life, it is not the meat itself because other foods rich in protein may be made to do almost as well as meat in furnishing the necessary protein. Fish is one of those foods, as is also cheese in any form.

Other foods high in protein are those of the dry bean family—white, navy and kidney beans, soybeans, peanuts and peanut butter.

The second point is that there is no reason why we should buy the expensive cuts of meat, because there is no difference in the amount or quality in expensive or cheap cuts.

For years, physicians have been advising patients with thin blood to eat more of the gland meats—kidneys, liver, heart—which foods are not usually rationed.

Finally, there are food substitutes designed to resemble various common foods which are really rich in food value and are not rationed.

The thought then is that we should all eat our full ration of meat if we are well and about on our feet, eat more fish, eggs, cheese, and green and yellow vegetables. If, then, we feel that we want or need more meat, remember that it is the protein that the body needs and there are plenty of other foods that are rich in protein.

Infected Appendix A Constant Threat

The story is told of two British mining engineers about to go on a prospecting trip. Both were in excellent health but as they thought of their destination, its distance from civilization, they decided to enter a hospital and have the appendix removed before starting.

Most physicians would agree that these engineers were wise.

Further, physicians are agreed that while the appendix must have had some use in the body in prehistoric times, there is at present no definite use for it. The appendix is just a remnant or trace of a once useful organ that has not completely disappeared from man. It is a blind pouch that may rest or lie in various positions about the last part of the small and the beginning of the large intestine. It has its own blood supply and a closing or obstructive arrangement at its base. Even in health it is filled with infective material and it contains a large amount of lymphoid or spongy tissue (similar to tonsils and adenoids) which is particularly easy to infect.

Because there is "always" the chance of infection present, Drs. Boyce and Nelson believe that any attack of appendicitis should be considered and treated as a serious attack.

"The problem of acute appendicitis would be solved and its challenge met if the public could be taught and if physicians would remember (1) that any abdominal pain may be the first symptom of acute appendicitis; (2) that food, fluids and particularly purgatives should be withheld in every case of abdominal pain until it is definitely decided that acute appendicitis is not present, and (3) that prompt operation should be performed as soon as the physician is reasonably sure that acute appendicitis is present.

Household Hints

Handle fruits and vegetables gently. Do not bruise.

Store berries, grapes and other delicate fruits unwashed in a cold place.

• • •

Common table salt is the best cleanser for a milk strainer. Rub both sides of the strainer vigorously with the salt.

• • •

Rich, active suds and thorough rinsing are elemental requirements for successful laundering.

• • •

A bit of wax rubbed on the bottoms of rockers, will prevent them marking even the glossiest of floors.

• • •

After butchering and cooking all the bone meat, there is always much greasy broth left. This can be canned. It is fine for seasoning beans, greens, cabbage or other foods. Save the broth for a day or two, then put in pint jars in a hot-water bath. Boil for 20 or 30 minutes.

• • •

A cloth dampened with vinegar or coal oil and rubbed over the windows before washing, will remove the smoky look.

• • •

To cut fresh bread, dip knife in boiling water and slices may be cut as thin as desired. A piece of apple in the breadbox will keep bread and cake fresh for days.

• • •

Soft water, or rain water, should be used in the cooling system of a tractor if possible, say agricultural engineers. Hard water will cause lime deposits on the walls of the water jackets and in the cylinder head, and also in the radiator. These deposits hinder the transfer of heat and may cause serious overheating of the engine.

FRANKIE SINKWICH, the No. 1 college football player of 1942, has brought considerable happiness to the National Football league.

In signing with the Detroit Lions, Frankie will bring many an added dollar to the Detroit clubs and to every other team in the circuit. The Lions had no "name" player on their squad at the time—and they needed one at least for the early part of the season.

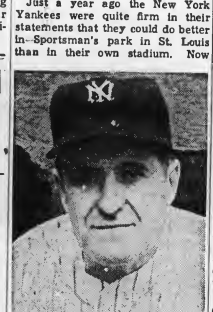
Sinkwich recently was given an honorable discharge from the marines after serving since the first of the year. He was given a medical discharge after spending some time in the hospital at Parris Island, S. C.

Sinkwich was the most publicized college gridder of the 1941 and 1942 seasons. His name on the roster will draw thousands of cash customers who haven't paid a great deal of attention to the Lions during the past.

The 1942 Season

The Lions, who finished last in the league last season, losing all 11 league games, were privileged to take first pick in the annual college draft, which was held last June in Chicago.

Sinkwich may not have what it takes to be a standout professional player. There have been plenty of big names in college ranks who failed in their professional careers. In fact, most of the top prefessional teams consist of individuals who never bothered going to college. They figured, and quite logically, that a college degree wasn't at all necessary to success on the professional circuit.



But chances are good that Frankie will become a valuable asset to the unfortunate Lions. Any team that loses all of its season's games can use very handily the services of a name player. He may not do so much toward improving the team's league standing, but he should help the treasury.

And when a player helps one club, he helps the entire league.

The World Series

Just a year ago the New York Yankees were quite firm in their statements that they could do better in—Sportsman's park in St. Louis than in their own stadium. Now

JOE McCARTHY

Manager Joe McCarthy's men are even happier over the 1943 World Series schedule, which calls for them to play the first three games in Yankee Stadium.

The Yankee players—and the New York fans—think the schedule gives the American leaguers a big advantage over the St. Louis Cardinals. But the bookies aren't influenced by intangibles and are hesitant about laying a price on the series. They won't concede the Yanks very much, if anything, because of the so-called "favorable" schedule, and chances are good the odds will be 6-5, take your choice.

Remaining Schedule

The fact that the first three games are going to be played at home isn't as important as the remainder of the schedule. It calls for a two-day travel intermission between the New York and the St. Louis games, and another open date for selling tickets if there is a seventh game.

This schedule means that Spud Chandler, the Yankees' mound ace, will be able to work at least twice and perhaps three times. Chandler won 19 games and lost only three, and is certain to draw the opening assignment from McCarthy on October 5. After four days' rest he will be able to start the first game in St. Louis, on Sunday, October 10. Then, if the series goes the limit, he could take another three-day rest before coming back for the final game.

Then there's big Ernie Bonham, who has won 13 and lost seven. He can be used twice, and Hank Borowy or Rookie Charley Wensloff can be called upon to fill in on the mound when needed.

The schedule works both ways, of course. The Cardinals have the same amount of time for rest, etc. They will have the opportunity to use Mort Cooper two or three times, but on the basis of past performance against the Yankees and other junior circuit hitters, it is doubtful if Manager Billy Southworth figures this balances the books.

WHAT HAPPENED TO CHATTERER

WERE you ever terribly frightened? That was the way Chatterer the Red Squirrel felt. You see, he was caught in a wire rat-trap in Farmer Brown's cornerib. He was caught—there was no doubt about it! His sharp teeth were of no use at all on those hard wires. He could look out between them, but he couldn't get out. He was too frightened to think. His heart pounded against his sides until it hurt. He forgot all about that queer food he had so wanted to taste and which was right before him now. Indeed, he felt as if he never, never would want to eat again. What was going to happen to him now? What would Farmer Brown's Boy do to him when he found him there?

Hark! What was that? It was a step just outside the door of the cornerib. Farmer Brown's Boy was coming! Chatterer raced around his little wire prison and bit savagely at the hard wires. But it was of no use, no use at all; it only hurt his mouth cruelly. Then the door of the cornerib swung open and a flood of light poured in, and with it came Farmer Brown's Boy.

"Hallo!" exclaimed Farmer Brown's Boy, as he caught sight of Chatterer. "So you are the thief who has been stealing our corn, and I thought it was a rat or a mouse. Well, well, you little red rascal, didn't you know that thieves come to no good end? You're pretty smart, for I never once thought of you, but you were not so smart as you thought you were. Now I wonder what we had better do with you."

Black Pussy tried to put a paw between the wires, and Chatterer saw the great, cruel claws.

He picked up the trap with Chatterer in it and stepped out into the beautiful, great out of doors. Chatterer could see across the dooryard to the Old Orchard and the familiar Old Stone Wall, along which he had sampered so often. They looked just the same as ever, and yet—well, they didn't look just the same, for he couldn't look at them without seeing those cruel wires which were keeping him from them.

Farmer Brown's Boy put the trap down on the ground and then began to call. "Puss, puss, puss," called Farmer Brown's Boy. Chatterer's heart, which had been thumping so, almost stopped beating with fright. There was Black Pussy, whom he so often had teased and made fun of. Her yellow eyes had a hungry gleam as she walked around the trap and sniffed and sniffed. Never had Chatterer heard such a terrible sound as those hungry sniffs so close to him! Black Pussy tried to put a paw between the wires, and Chatterer saw the great cruel claws. But Black Pussy couldn't get the paw between the wires because they were too close together.

"How would you like him for breakfast?" asked Farmer Brown's Boy.

"Meow," said Black Pussy, arching her back and rubbing against his legs.

"I suppose that means that you would like him very much," laughed Farmer Brown's Boy. "Do you think you can catch him if I let him out?"

"Meow," replied Black Pussy again, and to poor Chatterer it seemed the most awful sound he ever had heard.

"Well, we'll see about it by and by," said Farmer Brown's Boy. "There's the breakfast bell, and I haven't fed the biddies yet."

With that, he once more picked up the trap and started for the house.

POOR OLD PAW!

Small Boy—Mom, are you the nearest relative I've got?

Mother—Yes, dear, and your father is the closest.

DO NOT FEED!

Keeper—Get away from that cage! Johnny—Don't worry, I won't hurt your old lion.

Keeper—Maybe, but Leo nearly choked to death on a scout knife in a pocket of the last boy he ate.

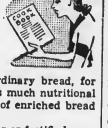
Plan Day's Meals Using Basic Seven As Your Guide

Utilize a little bit of meat with vegetables and tuck under a flavorful, flaky piecrust and serve the family a meat pie. All vegetables and meat are served in one casserole and save serving dishes.

Is there a blueprint or plan for making menus? That's a question homemakers frequently put to the food experts. Yes, there is. Suppose you are given a list of foods to be included in your daily diets, a sort of general plan that you can adapt to every day's needs. Can you make out your menus? Here is the blueprint:

Group I. Green and yellow vegetables. At least one of each kind should be included daily to meet vitamin and mineral requirements of the diet.



Group II. At least one serving of oranges, grapefruit or tomatoes to get enough Vitamin C in the diet. A good time to get this requirement in is during breakfast—with the fruit.

Group III. Potatoes or other fruit and vegetables to add more minerals and vitamins to the diet.

Group IV. Milk or milk products. This may be in the form of milk (1 pint per day for adults, 1 quart for children), fresh or evaporated, and cheese.

Group V. Meat, poultry, fish, eggs or dried beans, peas, nuts or peanut butter. This group is needed to build and repair body tissue.

Group VI. Bread, flour and cereals are required to meet energy needs and the vitamin B needs of the body. Be sure that any of these that you use are whole-grain, enriched or restored. You would have to eat four times as much ordinary bread, for example, to get as much nutritional value as one loaf of enriched bread contains.

Group VII. Butter or fortified margarine. Use some of either every day to give energy and vitamin A.

That's the plan. Use food out of every group, every day.

The best way to divide the groups into three balanced meals will run something like this:

For breakfast: Citrus fruit, cereal, eggs, milk or beverage, toast.

For lunch or dinner: Meat (poultry or fish, etc.), vegetable in either group I or III, milk or milk products.

For dinner or supper: Meat, poultry or fish, vegetable or fruit from groups I, II, or III. Milk or milk product, and also bread and butter from groups VI and VII.

An easy way to plan the menus is to write down the foods and the corresponding number of the group of food from which it comes. If you do not use one or two of the groups during one meal, pick them up at the next. No chance for slips, here! Keep one eye on the plan and the other on the ration books while doing this and you can meet the requirements of both.

Now, here is some concrete help to stretch those red points:

Sausage and Succotash Pie.
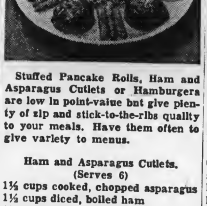
(Serves 4 to 6)
1 pound pork sausage meat
3 cups cooked, dried or fresh lima beans
1½ to 2 cups cooked corn
2 tablespoons red pepper, chopped
2 tablespoons shortening
4 tablespoons flour
3 cups milk



Lightly fry sausage. Drain well. Combine with vegetables. Make white sauce by blending flour into melted shortening. Add milk slowly, stirring constantly. Cook until thickened. Season, then add to meat mixture. Pour into baking dish. Top with pastry. Bake in a hot oven (425 degrees) 30 to 40 minutes.

Pork and Apple Turnovers.
(Makes 4 to 6)

Combine 1 cup chopped apple with 1 cup chopped cooked pork. Roll pastry thin and cut in 6-inch squares. Heap half of square with pork and apple mixture. Fold over diagonally. Moisten edges and press together. Prick top. Bake in a hot oven 30 to 40 minutes.

These ham and asparagus cutlets give a new twist to congenial and favorite foods:

Stuffed Pancake Rolls, Ham and Asparagus Cutlets or Hamburgers are low in point-value but give plenty of zip and stick-to-the-ribs quality to your meals. Have them often to give variety to menus.

Ham and Asparagus Cutlets.
(Serves 6)
1½ cups cooked, chopped asparagus
1½ cups diced, boiled ham
½ cup fine bread crumbs
2 tablespoons shortening
4 tablespoons flour
1 cup milk

Mix asparagus with ham and crumbs. Melt shortening, blend in flour. Stir in milk. Cook until thick. Add to first mixture, season to taste. Chill. Shape mixture to resemble chops. Dip in crumbs, then egg diluted with water, again in crumbs. Heat enough fat in skillet to cover bottom of skillet generously. Fry cutlets slowly until golden brown. Serve with Cheese Sauce: Melt 2 tablespoons shortening, blend in 3 tablespoons flour, stir in 1½ cups milk. Add 1¼ cups grated cheese. Cook until cheese melts.

Stuffed Pancake Rolls.
(Serves 4 to 6)
2 cups flour
½ teaspoon salt
1½ teaspoons baking powder
1 beaten egg
2 cups milk
2 tablespoons melted shortening
1½ cups chopped cooked lamb
1 cup leftover gravy
¼ cup grated cheese

Sift dry ingredients. Stir in egg, milk and shortening. Melt enough fat in skillet to cover bottom. Make 6 large thin pancakes 5 inches across. Brown on both sides. Mix meat with gravy. Heap meat in center of each pancake. Roll up. Sprinkle with cheese. Heat in oven until cheese melts.

Savory Cabbage.
(Serves 6)

Shred 1 small head of cabbage into 3 tablespoons of fat in a skillet, cover and cook slowly 15 minutes. Add 1 cup cubed salami or cervelat, salt and pepper and heat thoroughly.

Spinach.

Cook late spinach with bacon rind cut in snippets. Buying slab bacon with rind saves points.

Greens.

Chop 2 cups cooked greens with 1 tablespoon onion juice, 2 tablespoons horseradish, ¾ cup sour cream, salt and pepper. Serve on toast with crisp bacon.

Potato Salad.

Add 1 tablespoon ripe dill seeds to potato salad and serve cold with sliced tongue.

Lynn Says:

What they do: The basic seven food requirements are so made up as to take care of the body's demand for certain types of food.

For example, proteins, minerals and water are all essential to building torn parts of the body and keeping them in repair. They are needed for tissues, bones, muscles, blood and other fluids.

Energy for breathing, heart action, circulation of the blood, and other bodily functions is supplied by fuel foods—foods rich in fats and sugar.

To keep up the body's resistance to disease, to keep it in good running order, is the function of regulation and protective foods—these are the vitamins, minerals, water and roughage.

Improved Uniform International SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

JESUS AND THE TEN COMMANDMENTS

LESSON TEXT—Matthew 5:17-20; 19:16-22; John 5:39, 40.

GOLDEN TEXT—Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill.—Matthew 5:17.

With this lesson we begin a series of studies which should be of unusual value, a consideration of the Ten Commandments in the light of the teachings of Jesus, and other related New Testament passages.

It is appropriate to point out that, far from being outmoded, the Ten Commandments are really the basis of all moral law. They need a diligent restudy and re-emphasis in our day of disregard of moral standards.

As interpreted by the Lord Jesus and applied to our daily living, the truth of these commandments should be brought home to every boy and girl, man and woman in our Bible schools.

We learn here that our Lord did not come to set aside or destroy the law, but to fulfill it in the most complete way. But the gospel takes us a step beyond the law, and it is a great step, for we follow the One who is greater than the law.

I. Built on the Law (Matt. 5:17-20).

The law of God is eternal, never to be abrogated, never set aside. Christ Himself, although we might properly say that He was in reality the Lawgiver and thus had power and authority over the law, indicated His purpose in coming to be that of giving the law its full meaning, not of destroying it. One could wish that those who profess to be His servants might have the same measure of regard for God's law. If they did, they obviously would not be so ready to ignore it, so quick to change it or explain it away, and far more ready to accept with their Master every "jot and tittle," that is, even the minutest detail of His Word.

Recognizing Christ as the fulfillment of the law should prepare one to manifest obedience to every moral precept through His grace.

II. More Than the Law (Matt. 19:16-22).

Obedience to the commandments brings a man up to the very entrance upon life, but to enter in, he must have more than the "things" of the law; he must have the Person who is "the Door" to eternal life.

The young man who came to Christ was rich. His mind was obsessed with things. He had made it his business to observe the law, and had done well (v. 20), but his soul was not satisfied. He thought one more "thing" to do would accomplish his purpose.

The general attitude of the man was commendable. He sensed his lack of the vital something which would remake his life. He came to the right one—the Lord Jesus—with his question.

His failure to go beyond the things of the law to a faith in Christ, however, showed that he loved his possessions more than he desired to follow the Lord.

Those in our day who are trying to please God and gain eternal blessedness by works, by doing things and keeping commandments, need to recognize that in Christianity we have the One who is more than the law. They need to look away from things to be done, to the great thing that was done once and for all on Calvary.

III. Greater Than the Law (John 5:39, 40).

The Scriptures are great because they hear witness to the Christ who can give life. But obviously the One to whom they hear witness is greater than they are.

Paul speaks of the law as a "schoolmaster to bring us to Christ" (Gal. 3:24). The picture is literally of a servant charged with bringing the child to school where he may learn the truth. So the law convicts man of sin, makes him conscious of his own utter inability to meet God's requirements, and makes him ready to turn to Christ in faith and repentance (Rom. 3:20).

These men of our Lord's time were very religious. They spent much of their time searching the Scriptures that they might find eternal life. But most of them failed to understand that the life they sought was in the One who stood before them—Jesus of Nazareth—and not in the letter of the law.

This has a vital bearing on the proper study of the lessons of this quarter. The time has passed when men might seek life in the Scriptures apart from Jesus. Now that Jesus has come, life can be found only if the Scriptures lead one to Jesus.

"If our study of the Scriptures does not bring us to Christ, then it is vain indeed. For that reason we cannot study the Ten Commandments without turning constantly to Jesus as the One greater than the law" (Lesson Commentary).

Intricate Rattrap

Probably the most intricate rattrap ever invented is now available for use in large buildings, such as warehouses, factories and hotels, says Collier's. About the size of a trunk, with two "stories," many compartments and two ramps, this device automatically lures, traps, electrocutes and disposes of each rat in a few seconds and then resets itself, through a complicated electrical mechanism which includes photoelectric cells.

When you hear a Marine called a "Leatherneck," it has nothing to do with the epidermis of his neck. Years ago the Marine uniform was equipped with a high stiff leather collar. From that time on, "Leatherneck" has been the word for a Marine. The word for his favorite cigarette is "Camel"—his favorite cigarette also of men in the Army, Navy, and Coast Guard. (Based on actual sales records from service men's stores.) And though there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Fifty-three per cent of the cars on highways continue to waste rubber, for officials report that that number continue to be driven over 35 mph. A year ago 91 per cent of the cars traveled faster than the rubber conservation limit.

Kok-Saghyz, rubber-bearing Russian dandelion, was planted and grown in 100 different test localities in the U. S. last year. The B. F. Goodrich Company is aiding in this experiment.

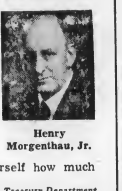
Listen to Morgenthau-Marshall Tell Power of Payroll Savings!

Washington, D. C.—How important is the average worker's war bond purchases out of his pay every payday in the grand strategy of the Allied High Command? Does the extent of his or her War Bond allotment have a part in determining when, where and the strength of our military blows?

George C. Marshall



Any worker listening in on a recent conversation between General George C. Marshall, President Roosevelt's Chief of Staff, and Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, Jr., learned the answers to these questions.

Said General Marshall:

"Mr. Secretary, I want you to answer a question for me and to answer it with complete frankness. Can we military leaders plan to fight this war in an orderly way—in the surest and most effective manner—or must we take extraordinary risks for fear the money will not hold out?"

Replied Secretary Morgenthau:

"General, the American public will take care of that. What they have done in the Second War Loan drive—the money they have produced and the spirit they have shown—is proof enough for me that they will not let our fighters suffer from lack of support until we achieve complete victory, no matter how long that may be nor how much it may cost."

Henry Morgenthau, Jr.

Up your War Bond allotment out of your wages today. Figure it out for yourself how much above 10 per cent it should be.

'TOWN AND FARM IN WARTIME"

Prepared by the Rural Press Section of O. W. I.

Ration Reminder

Gasoline—In 17 states of eastern shortage area A-6 coupons are now good. In states outside the eastern shortage area A-8 coupons are now good.

Fuel Oil—Period 5 coupons in old rations are good through September 30. Period 1 coupons in new rations are good through December.

Sugar—Stamp No. 14 good for 5 pounds through Ocober. Stamps Nos. 15 and 16 good for 5 pounds each for home canning through October 31.

Shoes—Stamp No. 18 good for 1 pair. Validity has been extended indefinitely.

Meats, Fats—Red stamps X, Y and Z good through October 2. Brown stamps A and B good through October 2. Brown stamp C good through October 30. Brown stamp D becomes good October 3 and remains good through October 30.

Processed Foods—Blue stamps U, V and W expire October 20.

Cut Expected In Shoe Ration

The new shoe stamp, No. 1 on the "Airplane" sheet in War Ration Book Three, which becomes valid November 1, probably will have to last six months, OPA has announced. At the same time OPA said that stamp 18, originally scheduled to expire October 31, is extended indefinitely and will overlap the next stamp. OPA's present plan is to eliminate expiration dates on shoe stamps and to make new stamps valid as soon as supplies warrant. This enables a person to save shoe stamps until shoes are needed.

More Leather For Shoe Repair

More leather will be available for repair of civilian shoes, as the result of a recent WPB order.

More Soap Provided

Consumers will have greater soap supplies within a few weeks. The War Food Administration has announced a program to provide a 28 percent increase in soap production for civilian use. WFA emphasized that there will still be no excess and urged soap-saving by every possible method.

May Requisition Idle Trucks

Idle used trucks may be requisitioned by district ODT offices or Agricultural County War Boards to transport vital agricultural products where such transport service is vitally needed. Requisitioning will be necessary only where owners of idle used trucks are unwilling to allow the use of their vehicles in this service.

Market Turkeys Now

Farmers are urged to market their turkeys as soon as possible so that the American Armed Forces overseas can have typical Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners. In a joint statement, Maj. Gen. E. B. Gregory, Quartermaster General, and Marvin Jones, War Food Administrator, appealed to farmers to "go over your turkey flocks carefully now with a view to offering as many as possible for sale to the government. Send them to your processor as early as possible. If you don't know where to market them, contact your nearest war board office or Quartermaster Market Center."

More Heavy Underwear Coming

The War Production Board has acted to increase production of certain types of men's and boys' knit underwear in which a shortage loomed.

Glass Cloth Prices Up

Prices for glass cloth, used as a substitute for glass in hot houses or chicken houses, will be higher to consumers since a recent OPA amendment.

To Issue Ration Book Four

War Ration Book Four, which will last approximately two years, will be issued to more than 120 million persons through schoolhouse distributions during the last 10 days of October, OPA has announced. The book combines point and unit stamps. It has eight pages containing 384 stamps printed in blue, red, green and black.

Pre-Induction Training For Boys

More than one million 16 and 17 year old boys will be enrolled in voluntary civilian pre-induction training courses in the nation's schools this fall, according to the War Department. Representing an enrollment of more than half of all the physically able boys at these age levels, the students are taking courses that will prepare them for more effective service in the armed forces. Officers at army reception centers record all pre-induction training on the soldier's permanent record card. This training is taking into consideration in making assignments to further training and army jobs.

Counties To Get WFA Awards

Counties in which farmers have achieved exceptional production will be awarded an agricultural achievement award by the War Food Administration. They will be cited for achievement in one or more of the following: production record and extent by which the county exceeded 1943 goals; overcoming severe handicaps; extent of shifts to vital war crops; improvement in farm production efficiency; fuller use of land and labor resources. One award may be made in each state with others in proportion to the state's ration of the total U. S. farm population. Probably most of the awards will be made in November. A similar award will be made to seasonal food processors with outstanding production records.

Certain Seeds Under Price Control

Buyer prices on processed and unprocessed seeds of alfalfa (northern, central, and southern) red clover, alsike clover, sweet clover, and timothy have been restored to approximate levels paid last spring. At the same time, OPA has assured producer-farmer somewhat higher returns than last season, reflecting parity prices or better on sales of these seeds to them.

Safeguard Government Checks

Despite repeated warning, records of the Bureau of Naval Personnel shows a steady increase in the number of allotment and family allowance checks stolen or lost after delivery. To prevent loss, the following suggestions have been offered: (1) be sure your name is on your mail box or door; (2) watch for your check and deposit it promptly in a regular place; (3) if you move, notify your postmaster and either the Allotment Division or the Family Allowance Division of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, Navy Department, Cleveland, O.

Give Soldier's Serial Number

The public is asked to use a soldier's army serial number in every case where inquiries are made to official agencies concerning either officer or enlisted personnel. Much time and meterial is wasted if the number is not given, according to the War Department.

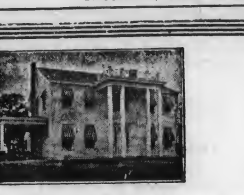
U. S. Casualties To Date 105,205

Announced casualties of the United States Armed Forces from the outbreak of the war to date (whose next of kin have been notified) total 105,205, according to War and Navy Department reports. This total includes: dead, 20,104; wounded, 28,226; missing, 32,905; prisoners of war, 23,970.

Army Spends Million For Recreation

The army is spending more than a million dollars a month for recreation and athletic equipment for its fighting men at home and overseas, the War Department reports. Equipment is provided for the favorite outdoor sports of the fighting men, particularly baseball and football. Those preferring less active recreation have the choice of cards, dominoes, darts, chess, checkers, backgammon, or bingo. Included among the purchases are musical instruments.

Fall Styles Help to Save Clothing.



There will be ample supply of clothing this winter if everyone will comply with the requests of the War Production Board to buy only what is needed, and to make what is on hand last, says a report from Washington. Patriotic support of that program will make labor and machinery available for the manufacture of urgently needed war materials.

Miss Dorothy Threlkeld, clothing specialist at the Kentucky College of Agriculture and Home Economics, points out that the new fall styles aid in carrying out a clothing conservation campaign. Colors, for example, are so varied that they include practically every shade. Hence the leftover coat or dress won't look out of place. The reason for the wide color choice is to spread the demand so that a few precious chemicals and dyes won't be exhausted. It is a season of medium to bright shades, with rich dark colors for contrast.

A fashion point frequently noted in ready-to-wear, Miss Threlkeld explained, is the combining of two fabrics, two colors, or the use of a bright color with black. The patriotic home sewer will make speedy use of these ideas as she cleverly camouflages last year's beige jersey dress with a vestee and belt of olive green tops a navy shirt with a red blouse, or brings up to date a dress of black rayon srepe with glistening satin.

Important in the fall wardrobe is the suit. Skirts look pencil-slim whether they are gored, shallow-pleated, or made straight. Jackets are single breasted by order of the WPB, shoulders are square. Collars may be velvet covered, and pockets, braid trimmed.

The popular jumper style dress, the use of brightly colored jackets with odd skirts, contrasting colors in blouse fronts or panels, and shirt waist dresses of two colors, are some of the practical ways of making use of garments on hand, suggested Miss Threlkeld.

Any time you are conveniently near our funeral home, pay us a visit. It will be a privilege to show you through, and you will learn much about the facilities offered by our establishment.

This is a standing invitation; accept it at your leisure.

Boone County "Over The Top" In 3rd War Loan Drive

Boone County goes "over the top" in the Third War Loan drive for a total of $933,235.95, oversubscribing its quota of $732,900.00 by more than $200,000.00.

Every precinct in the county oversubscribed its quota except two. The heavy oversubscription of the other precincts made possible this large total for the County.

Up until a week before the drive closed, last Saturday night, it looked as if Boone County would not raise its quota but due to the loyal, patriotic and public spirited citizens of the County who said, "Boone County shall not fail", this large amount of money has been raised.

1684 subscriptions were made in this drive. This is not as large a number of subscribers as should have been from a population of 10,000 people in Boone County, which caused a few people to subscribe for large blocks of bonds in order to put the drive over.

This is more than double the amount of money raised in the largest drive in World War 1.

The precinct Chairmen and workers are to be complimented on the splendid job they did and the County Chairman desires to express his appreciation for the splendid cooperation and hard work performed by every one in this drive.

Corn Fodder Valuable Feed

Boone County farmers are faced with high priced hay and grain feed this winter. They should make every effort to take full advantage of all corn stover or fodder at an early date, according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. With hay selling from $17 to $25 per ton and grain at prices much higher in proportion, all available feed should be saved.

Leaves from fodder are equal to timothy hay in feeding value. The husks and stalks while of less feeding value are far too valuable to waste. A shock of fodder usually weighs around 200 pounds and at the normal price of 25 cents per shock fodder would cost around $2.50 per ton. Comparing the feeding values in relation to hay prices, fodder is worth many times this price.

Below are a few important pointers farmers should follow in feeding corn fodder this year.

1. Rains leachs out more than half the feeding value before the first of the year. This means that the earlier it is fed the better.

2. Shredding if possible is highly recommended. Don't shred until after the first freeze. Used the refuse stover for bedding. There is no finer bedding and again the corn borers are killed by this process.

3. It is low in protein and vitamin A. Feed some protein feed with the stover, feed while winter pasture is still available and allow access plenty salt and ground limestone.

4. If silage is made, add enough water as the cut stover is put in the silo so that a man can squeeze out a drop or two of water from a double handful of material.

5. Do not enisle stover that has appreciably weathered or molded.

COUNTY CHAIRMEN SELECTED FOR NATIONAL WAR FUND DRIVE

During the weeks just passed, the people of the United States have been exhorted to LEND a part of their money at interest for the purpose of paying for ships, planes, tanks, guns and munitions of war. These are the "big" things that are absolutely necessary for the successful prosecution of the war.

However, in addition to these absolutely necessary expenditures, the morale and comfort of our fighting forces, must be maintained by what may be termed the "little" things. In a way these are just as essential as the "big" things. Likewise, our prisoners of war and those of the occupied territories of some of the allied nations, need and must have some relief to prevent the sufferings of hunger, and some of them must have medicines, especially the very old and the little children.

Much has been said and more will be said over the radio in the next two weeks about this request to GIVE, so I shall not deal with the world-wide scope of the National War Fund Drive, but deal solely with our local Boone County situation.

Based upon the same method of allocation of quotas as has prevailed in the bond drives, Boone County's Quota of this National Fund is $3,023.11, and using the same bases, the quotas for the various precincts and the various precinct chairmen are as follows:

PRECINCT	CHAIRMAN	QUOTA
Beaver	Mrs. Ruth Green	$116.55
Belleview	R. S. Hensley	$119.16
Bullitsville & Hebron	Charles W. Riley	$268.88
Burlington	J. K. Cropper	$414.07
Carlton	Reuben Kirtley	$108.32

Every person in Boone County should contribute something to this quota. Inability to buy war bonds, does not prevent anyone from contributing at least a dollar.

We cannot and must not fail to have $3,023.11 ready by October 30th—Why not make it $5,000.00?

When you are interviewed by a solicitor, be a co-solicitor. Everyone has a chance to help some, and I know that all will.

Boone County never failed in a single instance in World War No. 1 to meet every quota and has never failed in any quota in this war. WE MUST NOT FAIL IN THIS.

John L. Vest Named Special Judge In Gambling Hearing

John L. Vest, local attorney was named special judge Tuesday to preside at Newport's gambling raid hearing now going on, in place of Campbell Circuit Judge Raymond L. Murphy. This action was taken by the State Court of Appeals.

The high court granted Attorney General Hubert Meredith's motion to disqualify Judge Murphy after oral arguments during the forenoon in which Murphy's counsel, former State Senator Aubrey Barbour, termed the attorney general's move a "sham plea."

Barbour denied Meredith's charges that Judge Murphy patronized alleged gambling houses that were raided on Meredith's order September 21, or had "encouraged" alleged law violations by failing to order them stopped.

Meredith obtained a temporary writ restraining future gambling and permitting seizure of alleged slot machines and other gambling equipment at eight night clubs in Campbell County. He named 92 defendants, including a number of city and county officials and operators and employees of the alleged gambling places and estimated that equipment seized was worth $100,000.

Later he amended his petition to include Judge Murphy, Commonwealth's Attorney William Wise and two others as defendants.

Kiger Residence And Farm To Be Sold At Auction

"Rosegate," the Kiger home on the Dixie Highway north of Richwood, and the 20-acre farm on which it stands, will be offered at auction, Saturday, October 9th in one of the aftermath developments of the double slaying that shocked northern Kentucky last August.

The auction will be under the direction of Rel C. Wayman, Kenton county real estate dealer, who announced that the first bids will be asked at 10 a. m., Saturday, Oct. 9th.

The farm, which was the summer home of Carl C. Kiger, Covington vice mayor, was the scene of the slaying on Aug. 16 of Mr. Kiger and his six-year-old son, Jerry, a crime for which Mr. Kiger's daughter, Joan, now stands accused of murder.

The residence is a two-story structure with all modern conveniences, including four bedrooms. Also included is a combination garage and living quarters, a 40-by-60 concrete barn, tool house, cattle barn, loading chute, large chicken house and brooder house.

The farm acreage is fenced into fields and contains a large lake stocked with bass.

Along with the sale of the estate, the auctioneer will call for bids on approximately 250 household and farm articles and implements.

See Here, Private Hargrove!

by Marion Hargrove

W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: Private Marion Hargrove, former newspaper employee of a North Carolina paper, has been inducted into the army and is receiving his basic training at Fort Bragg. He has become well acquainted with many phases of army life but because of his classification as a cook and his too-often KP assignments he knows more about the Company kitchen than most rookies. He has acquired a good understanding of "goldbricking," "shooting the breeze" and all the other extra-curricular soldier activities. As we pick up the story he is discussing some of the interesting traits of his close friend, Private Sher. It is with Sher that Hargrove has shared many of his adventures.

CHAPTER X

There was one Sunday evening when Sher started a letter to his family and found, after a couple of paragraphs, that there was nothing for him to write about. "Here, Junior," he said. "Write a letter for your old daddy. Give them the old Hargrovian schmaltz."

Since Junior was in a devilish mood, he sat down and wrote a long and inspired letter to the Shers of Columbus, Ohio—telling them how their little Maurice was falling behind in his class by goldbricking and hanging out late at the Service Club, entreating them to return him to his true career, the Army. I finished by saying, "You see who's writing the letters; you should know where to send the cookies. Forget that bum Maury."

Several days later—after I had swapped in skillet for a typewriter and had moved to Headquarters Battery—I came by Battery A to see if I had any mail from my nonwriting friends in Charlotte. There weren't any letters, but there was a package which looked about the size of a steamer trunk. There were enough cookies inside to feed a small regiment for three days.

The card inside read: "Dear Hargrove—We think your idea about the cookies is superb. Give Maury one or two; he's a good boy when he wants to be. Why don't you come up to Columbus on your furlough?"

It seemed that this beautiful friendship—with all its fragrant memories, its happy hours and hell-raising, its beautiful cigarettes, cookies, and Samaritan relatives—was destined to end with the closing of the basic training cycle here.

The old gang, which has lived and worked and played together for over three months and has grown into a close and sympathetic brotherhood, is dissolving now. The training cycle is being finished and already the old ties are loosing.

The student cooks whom I grew to know and feel a fondness for during those months are not so fortunate as some of the other soldiers. The Charlotte boys who were inducted with me and who went through their antitank training together will go together to Fort Knox and will continue to be with each other for at least a while longer. On the other hand, these student cooks of Battery A will not go out together. No Fort is going to be sent a whole battery of cooks. One cook will be needed here, another there, and the old third platoon will be scattered from hell to breakfast.

An old thirty-year man, with five or six hash marks on his sleeve, will tell you that no matter how long you stay in the Army, you'll never find a battery that quite stacks up to the first battery in which you served, no group of buddies quite like the old gang you knew first.

There's a reason for it. In your first organization, you learn for the first time all the regulations and the customs and the traditions of the Army. When you first face them, they're tough or they're uninteresting, and when you finally get to understand and agree with them, they're identified in your memory with the battery where you learned them.

With the men who serve with you there, you grow closer through hardship and privation than you can possibly grow to any other group. After you get out into a line organization—a real tactical unit, such as these boys are entering—any hardship or misery is just a part of the routine. The sufferers are men rather than boys.

But in this first training cycle, this rookie stage, you haven't been hardened. You and the new soldiers about you are sensitive, delicate boys, newly yanked from home or school, accustomed to an easy-going and usually painless life. You share each other's illness, fatigue, despair. When Happy Menza grows homesick for Buffalo and McGlaudlin starts a wistful reminiscing about the lakes and forests of Minnesota, you are homesick for them rather than for yourself. You are companions tested in misery.

Friday night was probably the last evening the boys of my old crowd would be together. At least, it was the last evening they were sure of being together. The following day they were to go home for a week's furlough. On their return, next Monday, they will be assigned to their permanent stations to enter the field as soldiers. So they arranged to hold a party Friday night on the river beyond Fayetteville.

When we rode to the river in our chartered bus, we rang the welkin with the old songs—the faintly flagrant songs you pick up through the years and the "Caisson Song" and "Old King Cole" that you learn in the Army. They were boisterous, those songs, but a melancholy strain ran under all of them.

At the party we ate barbecue and we drank beer and we recalled the best anecdotes of the training cycle. We sang and we shouted. Two or three of the boys dipped a little too deep into the keg and became slightly sentimental. And although the food and the beer were the best, the songs were the songs we loved and the anecdotes were the cream of the season, it was empty joy. It had a dull undercurrent of sorrow.

It was the sort of feeling that you know in the last hour before the New Year's bells, the feeling that reaches its fullest when "Auld Lang Syne" is heard.

Since we left our homes last July we've learned a lot. Drills and rifles, pup tents and gas masks, all of that.

This, though—the scattering of our first fraternity—is another thing we have learned, now and for the first time. It is our first lesson in a new kind of homesickness, bred only in the Army.

"Private Hargrove," I said to myself, "you have been doing quite too much gallivanting lately. There have been too many movies, too many ball sessions, too many hours spent at the Service Club and too much time spent flirting with that cute little waitress at the delicatessen in Fayetteville. Tonight, Private Hargrove, you will take this interesting and improving book, read it until Lights Out and go to bed promptly at nine o'clock."

There was a little back talk, a little argument, a little entreaty. However, the forces of Truth and Progress prevailed. Immediately after supper I adjourned to the squadroom, arranged myself comfortably on my bunk and dug into the interesting book. Peace and quiet held sway about me.

Private Wesley Sager, late of Amsterdam, New York, grew weary of the quiet. Yawning widely, he rolled over in bed and with a sudden swoop yanked the pillow from beneath the head of Private Melvin Hart. "Yippee," screamed Private Sager, tossing the pillow across the squadroom to a willing accomplice. "Yippee," screamed the willing accomplice, tossing the pillow back to Private Sager.

Private Hart rose and retrieved his pillow with dignity and formality. He placed it on his bunk, smoothed it and laid his head upon it. Three privates sighed in resignation. The incorrigibles were at it again.

Private Sager lay quiet for a while. Then he broke into a loud, regular, but unconvincing snore. The three sighing privates did not return to their occupations, but lay in philosophic expectation. Once the boys in that corner got started, nothing but physical exhaustion could stop them.

Private Sager turned as if tossing in his sleep. Private Hart noted the move and held his book ready to strike if a hand came toward his pillow. Private Sager turned again, facing away from Private Hart, and Private Hart relaxed his vigil. When he did, the hand shot out once more and the pillow sailed across the room and into waiting arms.

Again Private Hart retrieved the pillow and again he lay down. "Why," he asked, "must you behave like a two-year-old infant? Can't you act like a normal adult?"

"Sure I can," Private Sager replied. "Kindly step outside with me and put up your fists."

Private Hart gave vent to a quiet and gentlemanly oath. "Please do me the honor to shut your mouth," he requests. "I should like to read without the clamor of your big yap roaring in my ears."

This is but the opening gun. Almost daily it marks the beginning of a half-hour session of blusters, threats, extravagantly insulting remarks, and repeated invitations from each side for the other to step outside and settle it. Nothing ever comes of it and soon the contending parties tire of the play.

Silence reigns again, but its throne is shaky. Private Hart tires of his book and turns to Private Sager. "Were you at the dance last night when the redhead got started telling what she thought of Jim Carney's dancing?"

Private Carney picks up the bait. "Anything Hart says about me or about what anybody else says about me is entirely fictitious, and any resemblance to persons living or dead is coincidental and not intended."

Private Sager sits up suddenly in bed. "Don't talk like that about Hart," he says in a quiet, serious, and menacing voice. "Anything you say about Hart is a personal insult to me. If you're inclined to insult me, kindly take off your stripe and step outside with me."

"Don't you go talking like that to the ranking first-class private of this section," rasps Private Hart. "I don't like your manner at all. Kindly step outside with me while I beat your brains out."

If you want peace and quiet on these stay-at-home nights, the best solution is to go to the second barracks down the line. There's nobody down there except fifty-eight members of the band, who are always rehearsing at this time of night.

Slang runs wild in the Army. It's like a disease or the liquor habit. Among the boys who sit around on the back steps after Lights Out and bat the breeze far into the night, a simple and understandable English word is used where a weird and outlandish concoction can be substituted.

Water is GI lemonade. Salt is sand or Lot's wife; pepper is specks; sugar is sweetening compound. Milk is cat beer; butter, dogfat. Ketchup is blood. In the untiring imagination of the soldier, green peas become China berries; horning grits are glamorized into Georgia ice cream; rice is swamp seed. Potatoes become Irish grapes; prunes change to strawberries; hot cakes become blankets. Bread is punk and creamed beef on toast is punk and salve. Meat loaf and hash are kennel rations.

It is strictly against the code of the Army to say a complimentary word about the food or the cook, no matter how good the food is or how hard the cook labors to make it so. Oscar of the Waldorf in the Army, would still be either a slum-burner or a belly-robber.

Back at the News, the boys in the composing room and the mailing department used to send greenhorns searching all over the building for erasing ink, striped or dotted ink, paper stretchers, and other non existent items. Here, a new and gullible man is sent for the cannon report, or for the biscuit gun, the flagpole key, or the rubber flag which is used on rainy days.

DIET FOR THE AGING

It is true that as we grow older we need foods easy to digest but many as they grow older still have physical work to do and need nourishing foods some of which require chewing before they will digest readily. Therefore if the individual has but a few or no chewing teeth — grinders—he should be fitted for artificial teeth by his dentist. In his book, "The Patient Past Fifty," Dr. Ernest P. Boas states. "It is most important to see to it that every aging person has dentures (plates) that will enable him to chew varied and adequate foods. An old person commonly restricts his dietary to cereals, soft bread and tea and coffee because he cannot chew most of the food that is set before him."

The most important item or items of food for the nourishment and well being of the elderly individual are the protective foods. The protective foods as described some years ago by Dr. E. B. McCollum, Johns Hopkins, are milk and other dairy products, meats, fruits, and green vegetables, because of their vitamins and minerals. Vitamin A is found particularly in milk, butter, eggs, cheese, liver and green vegetables; vitamin B in whole wheat bread, beef, mutton, and many vegetables; vitamin B-2 in milk, fruits, and leafy vegetables; vitamin C in fruits—oranges, limes, lemons, tomatoes and melons.

Another suggestion is that elderly individuals should try to eat three meals of about the same size instead of making the evening meal the largest and heaviest one. In fact, the large meal of the day should be eaten at noon, with a light supper in the evening. A rest of an hour after eating, instead of walking or working immediately after eating, aids digestion and avoids overtaxing the heart which otherwise would have the duty of increasing its work to take care of digestion and exercise or work at the same time. If tea and coffee agree, one or two cups daily are allowed.

Nicotinic Acid Relieves 'Tic' Pains

In past years treatment for the relief of that terrible pain, tic douloreux (trigeminal neuralgia), was surgery. While surgery must still be considered the most effective treatment, other methods have given relief for months and even years and are preferred by patients and physicians before surgery is used. Recently I spoke of a sinusoidal current as reported by Dr. Benjamin Ulaski of Philadelphia, which gave relief in a number of cases.

What causes tic doloreux? The cause is unknown, but it is known that very little is needed to set off the nerve trigger causing the outburst of severe pain.

Two British research workers, Drs. W. E. Adams and W. Robinson, thinking that the cause of tic doloreux was in some way connected with the blood supply to the trifacial nerve supplying head and face not receiving enough blood or oxygenated blood, tried drugs to close off the blood supply and drugs to increase the blood supply to this nerve and the large ganglion from which the trifacial nerve emerges at a point under the ear. Their findings are reported in the Lancet, an English medical journal.

In three cases they gave drugs that partially closed the blood vessels supplying the trifacial nerve; in one of these cases the drug (adrenalin) caused an attack of tic doloreux before the patient had been put on treatment with dilator drugs (the drugs that open up the blood vessels). In the other two cases benzedrine sulphate (another "vessel" closing drug) increased the number and severity of the attacks of tic doloreux.

The dilator drug, nicotinic acid, was used (to give an increased supply of blood to the trifacial nerve) to seven patients, two male and five female, ranging from 39 to 62 years, in doses which varied from 50 milligrams twice a day to 75 milligrams four times a day.

"In every case there was improvement, amounting in some cases to complete relief." In two patients a return of pain was relieved by breathing in amyl nitrate, a dilator drug.

Improved Uniform International SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, D. D. Of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. (Released by Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for October 10

Lesson subjects and Scripture texts selected and copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education; used by permission.

REVERENCE FOR GOD

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:3-7; Matthew 4:10; 6:9; John 4:23, 24.

GOLDEN TEXT—God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.—John 4:24.

The first three commandments bring man into the presence of God, where he is taught how to worship God in spirit and in truth.

"The first commandment (Exod. 20:3) bids us worship God exclusively; the second (vv. 4-6) bids us worship Him spiritually. The first commandment forbids us to worship false gods; the second forbids us to worship the true God under false forms" (Farrar). The third commandment (v. 7) indicates that true worship will deal reverently with the name of God.

Israel had lived among the Egyptians, a people known for their worship of images, and were about to enter into Canaan where there were many false gods. The Lord was therefore careful not only to forbid the worship of other gods, but also to forbid the making of images of any kind, whether they represented the many gods of heathendom, or were attempts to symbolize the true God.

I. The Command to Worship (Exod. 20:3-7).

God first claims the entire devotion of man. If He is Jehovah, the Lord God, it is obvious that there can be no other god before Him. He is a personal God (v. 2) with whom it is possible for man to have fellowship. He must come first in our thought and our love.

The second commandment expressly forbids idolatry in any form. The injunction is twofold. (1) Men are forbidden to make any material likeness which to them represents a being to be worshiped. It matters not whether it be an image or what men believe God to be like, or the image of an angelic being, a heavenly body, in fact, "anything that is in the heaven above," or on the earth—such as a man or animal; or under the water—such as a fish. (2) If such objects have been made either by ourselves or others we may not bow down to them, nor render any service to them. Let us all examine our religious ceremonies and practices in the light of God's commandment.

Observe that obedience to this command brings rich blessing to "thousands" (v. 6), whereas disobedience is a curse not only to the man who disobeys, but also to his descendants.

The careless, vain or irreverent use of God's name is forbidden (v. 7). How common that practice is today, even among Christian people. If we do not actually use His name, we use some slang expression which stands for His name.

Now we turn to two passages from the Gospel of Matthew to see how Jesus practiced these commandments.

II. The Example of Christ (Matt. 4:10; 6:9).

To the temptation of Satan, offering rich reward for an act of worship to himself, Jesus gave prompt and effective reply by quoting Deuteronomy 6:13. Thus He gave His approval to the command that all our worship and service is to be given to God.

This spirit shows itself in the reverent devotion of the prayer (6:9) which Jesus taught His disciples. The name of God is to be hallowed—that is, to be regarded as holy. No one set a higher example of that than our Lord. Himself God, He was obedient to the Father, even unto death, always doing those things which pleased Him and honored His name (John 8:29; Phil. 2:8).

III. The Manner of True Worship (John 4:23, 24).

God is to be worshiped in spirit and in truth, not in dead formalism or by empty ritual. There must be reality in such devotion.

One would suppose that a truth so obvious and vital would long since have completely saturated the life of the church as well as of the individual believer. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

Even today, countless men and women still believe that worship has something to do with place (vv. 20, 21) or race (v. 22) or some other external device or formula. What a pity, when the gracious and delightful way to worship is through personal spiritual communion between God and man.

Deadening formalism is not our only enemy. There is the powerless preachment of modernism—and in all honesty must we not admit that even some so-called fundamentalism has in many respects lost the true spirit of the faith for which it rightly contends.

We see then that the commandment of God regarding reverence is not just a law on a faded page in an ancient manuscript. It is a living, vital reality, operative today.

CHATTERER IS SURE THIS IS HIS LAST DAY

THERE was no hope, not the teenleast-weeniest ray of hope in the heart of Chatterer the Red Squirrel, as Farmer Brown's Boy picked up the wire rat-trap in which Chatterer was a prisoner and started for the house—Black Pussy, the cat, following at his heels and looking up at Chatterer with cruel, hungry eyes. Chatterer took a farewell look at the Old Orchard and way beyond it the Green Forest from which he had been driven by fear of Shadow the Weasel. Then the door of the farmhouse closed and shut it all out. If there had been any hope in Chatterer's heart, the closing of that door would have shut the last bit out. But there wasn't any hope. Chatterer was sure that he was to be given to Black Pussy for her breakfast.

Farmer Brown's Boy put the trap down on a table. "What have you there?" called a great voice. It was the voice of Farmer Brown himself, who was eating his breakfast.

"I've got the thief who has been stealing our corn in the crib," replied Farmer Brown's Boy, "and who do you think it is?"

"One of those pesky rats," replied Farmer Brown. "I'm afraid you've been careless and left the door open some time and that is how the rats have got in there."

"But it isn't a rat and I don't believe that there is a rat there," replied Farmer Brown's Boy, in triumph. "It's that little red scamp of a squirrel we've seen racing along the wall on the edge of the Old Orchard lately. I can't imagine how he got in there, but there he was and now here he is."

Farmer Brown's Boy picked up the wire trap and started for the house.

"What are you going to do with him?" asked Farmer Brown, coming over to look at Chatterer.

"I don't know," replied Farmer Brown's Boy, "unless I give him to Black Puss for her breakfast. She has been teasing for him ever since I found him." Farmer Brown's Boy looked over to the other side of the table as he said this and his eyes twinkled with mischief.

"Oh, you mustn't do that! That would be cruel!" cried a soft voice. "You must take him down to the Green Forest and let him go." A gentle face with plying eyes was bent over the trap. "Just see how frightened the poor little thing is! You must take him right down to the Green Forest right after breakfast."

"Isn't that just like Mother?" cried Farmer Brown's Boy. "I believe it would be just the same with the ugliest old rat that ever lived. She would try to think of some excuse for letting it go."

"God made all the little people who wear fur, and they must have some place in His great plan," said Mrs. Brown.

Farmer Brown laughed a big hearty laugh. "True enough, Mother," said he. "The trouble is, they get out of place. Now this little rascal's place is down in the Green Forest and not up in our corncrib."

"Then put him back in his right place!" was the prompt reply, and they all laughed.

Now all this time poor Chatterer was thinking that this surely was his last day. You see, he knew he had been a thief, and he knew that Farmer Brown's Boy knew it. He just crouched down in a little ball too miserable to do anything but tremble every time anyone came near. He was sure that he had seen for the last time the Green Forest and the Green Meadows and jolly Mr. Sun and all the other beautiful things he loved so, and it seemed as if his heart would burst with despair.

Bus Lines Hiring Women Drivers

Now that hundreds of women have proven entirely capable of driving buses on the West Coast and in other war production areas, the National Association of Motor Bus Operators reports that major lines in all parts of the country are hiring women to pilot the highway streamliners.

The manpower shortage is bringing about the innovation even though men bus drivers are classed as essential workers because of their importance to the nation's wartime transportation needs. However, in replacing men who have entered the armed services, the bus companies are making certain that the public won't apply the epithet of "that woman driver!" to any of the new operators. What's more important, the enviable safety records of the industry must be maintained.

Women drivers already employed are handling the shorter intercity routes. They were selected from thousands of applicants through rigid examinations for physical fitness, driving qualifications, mental alertness, neatness and courtesy. Similar standards are being set up by all intercity bus lines, the association reports. Before donning trim uniforms and taking up their war-essential work the successful applicants are given intensive course in actual bus driving by experienced driver-instructors.

Because the intercity bus industry was not in existence during the last war when similar manpower shortage problems were encountered, the employment of women drivers is really a new development and one that the operators accepted with some misgivings. The public has voiced no objections probably because riders are glad to have the bus come along, no matter whether a man or a woman is at the wheel. The very few criticisms received come oddly enough, from other women who seem to resent that one of their sex has qualified for the job.

About 10 percent of the tobacco in Clay county was primed this year, returning an estiated $7,000 to the grower of the county.

Hunting Season Is Mared By Firearm Accidents In Woods.

Frankfort, Ky., Sept.—Alarmed by the number of hunting accidents reported since the opening of the squirrel season, S. A. Wakefield, Director of the Division of Game and Fish, today urged more careful handling of firearms at all times.

Ten "Safety Commandments" for observance by all hunters were cited as a means of preventing further accidental shootings during the squirrel season and during the rabbit and bird hunting seasons which will follow. These suggestions include:

1. Treat every gun with the respect due a loaded gun. This is the cardinal rule of gun safety.
2. Carry only empty guns, taken down or with the action open, into your automobile, boat, camp or home.
3. Always be sure that the barrel and action are clear of obstructions.
4. Always carry a gun so that you can control the direction of the muzzel even if you stumble.
5. Be sure of your target before you pull the trigger.
6. Never point a gun at anything you do not want to kill.
7. Never leave your gun unattended unless you unload it first.
8. Never climb a fence or tree with a loaded gun.
9. Never shoot at a flat hard surface or the surface of water.

Observance of these simple precautions will do much to eliminate firearms bunting accidents in Kentucky, preventing tragedies which mar the pleasure of hunters and eliminating the loss of working time in weeks when production of food and war materials is vital for victory.

On Top of the World!

YES, she's on top of the world . . . her fairyland world of fun and play and rides on Daddy's shoulder.

It's a world of glorious new adventures by day . . . of song and love and laughter . . . of peace and pleasant dreams at night . . . a world that knows no hate or hunger, no fear of sudden death, no terror of families torn apart.

It's the kind of a world that the 42,000 men and women of the Southern Railway System are fighting for . . . repairing cars and locomotives in record-breaking time . . . finding new and better ways to "railroad" . . . always managing, somehow, to do "the impossible."

For they know . . . these men and women of the Southern Railway . . . that, by doing these things, they are helping to win the war.

They know, too, that they are learning how better to serve the Greater South that will emerge with Victory . . . the Southland in which the little children will truly be "on top of the world" . . . laughing and playing without fear . . . and growing up in a veritable fairyland of exciting new opportunities for all.

Lady Nearly Choked While Lying In Bed— Due To Stomach Gas

One lady said a few days ago that she used to be afraid to go to bed at night. She was swollen with stomach gas, which always got worse when she went to bed, and the gas would rise up in her throat after she lay down and would nearly choke her. She couldn't lie flat. Had to prop herselfself up on pillows. Recently this lady got ERB-HELP and now says gas is gone, stomach feels fine, bowels are regular and she can go to bed and sleep soundly.

ERB-HELP contains 12 Great Herbs; they cleanse bowels, clear gas from stomach, act on sluggish liver, and kidneys. Miserable people soon feel different all over. So don't go on suffering! Get ERB-HELP. Jones Drug Store.

Wartime Lighting Suggestions

HOW TO GET MORE LIGHT FROM YOUR PRESENT EQUIPMENT

Place Lamps to Utilize Light Output Most Efficiently

The amount of useful light you get from a lamp decreases rapidly as the lamp is moved away from the area to be lighted. Conversely, the useful light increases greatly as the light source is moved toward the working area. In the above example, merely by moving the end table lamp eight inches from the far to the near side of the table, the amount of useful light for reading or sewing was more than doubled. Remember this important point and always place chairs close to lamps. You'll not only get more light for your money, but you'll prevent needless eyestrain.

OTHER WAYS TO CONSERVE LIGHT

1. Remove and clean lamp bulbs and lamp bowls regularly. Dry thoroughly before using again.
2. Keep shade linings light. Clean or brush regularly. Repaint or reline dark-colored paper or parchment shades.
3. Sit close enough to the lamp to get all the help it can give your eyes.
4. Avoid direct glare from lamp bulbs by using shades deep enough and wide enough.
5. Arrange furniture so one lamp can serve two people. But be sure lamp is not too far away from either person.
6. Turn off lamps not in use. Lamp bulbs use critical materials... Make them last longer.

Electricity ...is vital to war production. Use all you need but don't waste it just because it's cheap and isn't rationed.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Allied Drive in Italy Gathers Speed As German Forces Face Encirclement; Aerial Blows Hit Japs in New Guinea; Battle Lines Drawn for Subsidy Fight

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

This picturesque chapel in an American military cemetery on Guadalcanal in the Solomons was designed by natives. Chaplains Oliver Grotefund (left) of Detroit, Mich., and John O'Niel of Boston, Mass., are shown conducting first service.

ITALY:
Take Big Air Base

Clinging stubbornly to the mountainous terrain, German small artillery and machine gunners slowed the progress of Lieut. Gen. Mark Clark's advancing Fifth army in the Naples area.

The whole German line facing the Fifth army, however, was in danger of encirclement, following the British Eighth army's capture of Foggia, 80 miles to the northeast. With the British threatening their rear, the Nazis could continue to hold out only so long as it would take Montgomery's men to cross the mountains and get behind their backs. Thus, a slow and bloody German withdrawal up the Italian mainland loomed.

Possession of Foggia gave the Allies a network of airfields from which they could blast southern Germany and the Balkans. From Foggia, Munich is 500 miles. Vienna with its airplane factories 465 miles, and the Ploesti oil fields of Rumania 580 miles.

Feet in Both Camps

With the restoration of Fascism in northern Italy under German auspices and the reported recognition of King Victor Emmanuel's government as a partner by the Allies, Italy apparently has stuck a foot in both camps.

King Victor Emmanuel

Although the U. S. and Britain have refused to accept King Victor Emmanuel's government as an ally, they would welcome its assistance in helping throw the Germans from Italy, and thus give it rank as a military rather than a political partner. King Victor Emmanuel's government has been anxious to enter the Allied camp as a military partner, hoping that its co-operation would promote better peace terms for it.

Meanwhile, Benito Mussolini has been active in reforming his fallen Fascist regime in the north with German support. The Duce expects to raise an army to fight alongside of the Nazis again, and he has promised to abolish the monarchy and establish a republican government in which the people, rather than the king, would have the final voice.

SOUTHWEST PACIFIC:
On Move Again

Continuing Gen. Douglas MacArthur's policy of striking directly at enemy bases, Allied troops moved farther up the northeastern coastline of New Guinea to strike at the Japanese shipping port of Madang from the rear.

As the Allied forces worked their way up the Markham Valley toward Madang, other units bore down on Finschafen, the important sea and air base which lay encircled from three sides. Australian troops landed by sea to the north of the Jap base encountered bitter resistance.

Despite heavy attacks by Jap bombers, more American troops were put ashore on Vella Lavella island in the Solomons. Reinforcement of the U. S. garrison there further tightened the noose around the last Jap holding of Kolambangara island in the area.

DRAFT:
Eye U. S. Employees

With Sen. Burton K. Wheeler's bill for the deferment of fathers doomed, Sen. Josiah Bailey proposed another measure which would require the induction of all draft-age single or childless married men now on the government payroll who did not switch to essential work.

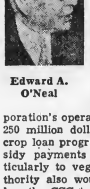
Sen. Josiah Bailey

Senator Bailey's bill also provided for the transfer of all physically fit army and navy commissioned officers between 18 and 38 years of age from noncombatant duty in Washington, D. C., to actual fighting.

In recent testimony before congressional committees, it was estimated that approximately 650,000 single and childless married men were on the government payroll. Opponents of the dads' draft insist that all eligible men from this group should be taken by the services before fathers are called. A bill drawn by Sen. Robert Taft would first draft all dads under 30 years of age.

Workers Needed

Declaring that in 1943 the civilian employment has remained below the level reached last year by 1,300,000, the army's industrial personnel director, James P. Mitchell, said the nation was faced with increasing the efficiency of the present labor force, or of drafting workers from non-essential to essential occupations.



Manpower is poorly distributed, Mitchell said, so that while there is adequate labor throughout the country, there are acute shortages in some areas and surpluses in others.

Mitchell urged that more consideration be given to the employment of women, stating that they compose the chief source of manpower remaining in the nation.

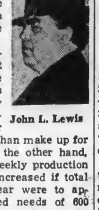
'Fight Is On'

"The battle is on!"

With these words the American Farm bureau president, Edward A. O'Neal, declared that agricultural organizations would back up the congressional farm bloc's opposition to subsidies for the decrease of consumer food costs.



Edward A. O'Neal

The battle lines were drawn following reports that efforts would be made to increase the Commodity Credit corporation's operating fund by at least 250 million dollars, to continue the crop loan program and initiate subsidy payments to producers, particularly to vegetable growers. Authority also would be sought to allow the CCC to resell produce at a loss.

Strong criticism was directed in congress at the government's announced plan for subsidizing dairymen between 25 and 50 cents per hundred pounds of milk for increased feed costs. It was felt prices should be determined by production costs.

COAL:
Rationing Possible

As the OPA drew up plans for possible coal rationing, John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers and Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes' office found themselves in disagreement on the nation's supply.

John L. Lewis

A UMW spokesman declared that shortages of some by-product coals used by industry may exist, but production from other mines would more than make up for such scarcity. On the other hand, Ickes' office said weekly production would have to be increased if total supplies for the year were to approximate estimated needs of 600 million tons. It was said any increase was questionable in view of the constant loss of miners to other industries.

RATION POINTS:
Increased Sharply

Because of declining production, the office of price administration has raised the point value of butter from 12 to 16 points, the total allotment of red points per person each week. At the same time increases in points on nine items, and reductions in four others were announced.

The following increases have been ordered, based on the No. 2 size can: Apricots, from 27 to 36 points; red sour cherries, 14 to 25; other cherries, 14 to 23; figs, 13 to 21; grapefruit juice, 10 to 18; plums and prunes, 7 to 15 points. Grape juice was raised from 3 to 6 points a quart. Asparagus and mushrooms also were elevated in point value.

Reductions were ordered for canned green or wax beans, down from 10 to 8 points for the No. 2 can; corn, from 16 to 13, except for whole kernel vacuum-packed, which went down from 20 to 18 points. Dried peas and lentils have been placed on the unrationed list.

OPA:
Dealers Licensed

Only farmers, fishermen and government agencies are exempt from federal licensing following an OPA order that all persons or concerns selling services or commodities under price controls are required to have licenses.

Most wholesalers and all retailers automatically were licensed, and the recent order was designed to take in canners, meat packers, auctioneers, brokers and other agents.

Licenses of operators found guilty of price control violations can be suspended for as long as 12 months.

NAZIS AND JAPS:
Strength Greater

". . . Recent victories have failed to affect in any vital degree the strength of the enemy . . ." With these words Undersecretary of War Robert Patterson summed up statements of Gen. George C. Marshall, Gen. H. H. Arnold and Maj. Gen. George V. Strong to a gathering of ranking industrialists, labor leaders and newspaper executives.

Gen. H. H. Arnold

As chief of military intelligence, General Strong revealed that the Nazis now have three times as many combat divisions as they had when they invaded Poland, and their domination of conquered countries has given them a labor force of 35 million workers. Despite recent heavy losses, the Nazis' air force exceeds its pre-war strength.

Japan can call upon four million soldiers for action, General Strong said, and, like the Nazis, her conquests have given her a vast pool of manpower and natural resources.

RUSSIA:
Last Ditch

The Dnieper river reached, the Nazis dug into its western banks in an attempt to throw back the charging Russian armies.

Failure to hold the line along the 750-mile Dnieper river would compel the Nazis to withdraw to prepared defenses on the 1939 pre-war boundaries.

No sooner had the Nazis reached the broad Dnieper, however, than Russian units forced their way across the river at several points, and paratroopers were dropped behind the German lines on the west bank. The Nazis sought to wipe out these detachments before they could establish footholds.

In the oil rich Caucasus, the last German troops were thrown out, relieving the threat to the Russian fuel supply. In all the Reds have regained over 300,000 miles of the territory overrun by the Nazis.

REAL ESTATE:
Enjoying Boomlet

Rising selling prices in 87 per cent of all cities in the country, and increased sales in 71 per cent, distinguish the current real estate market.

Realty is in greatest demand in cities with war-time industrial activity, and buyers' interest has not been dampened by ceilings on rentals. Inquiries for business properties have decreased because of goods shortages.

QUEZON ON THE JOB

It's bad news for the Japs that President Quezon of the Philippines is back in Washington. They knew —though it was not generally realized in Washington—that Quezon had suffered a relapse of his old illness, tuberculosis, which has plagued him off and on for 20 years.

Quezon was a well man at the time of Pearl Harbor. But confinement in the dampness of Corregidor, during the Jap attack, brought the illness back again. That was one reason MacArthur urged him to return to the U. S. in a submarine. When he came to Washington, Quezon was advised to take things easy. Instead he rushed into the official activities of Philippine Commonwealth affairs, not sparing himself.

His physicians advised him not to remain in Washington during the summer of 1942, nor last winter. But he remained nevertheless. Result was that last spring he suffered a further relapse.

Specialists were summoned, and Quezon was given the stern advice that he would have to get out of the humid climate of Washington immediately, if he wanted to live. Yielding to pressure, he went to Saranac, N. Y., and submitted himself to a rigid discipline during most of the past summer.

Quezon led the life of an invalid, sitting in the sunshine in a wheel chair, listening to the radio, or to his nurses as they read to him. Result of this regime was that the tuberculosis was arrested, and Quezon gained 12 pounds.

When the Japs heard of his relapse, they were ready to say to the people of the Philippines, where Quezon is still highly popular: "Look, this is the skeleton you pin your hopes to."

But today Quezon is back on his feet and back at his desk, still hoping to realize his one great ambition, to see U. S. and Philippine forces march into Manila.

SEVEN MINUTES TO WAR

Every day now, pictures are arriving in a little room in Washington which seven minutes before were in Algiers, 3,400 miles away. One day, just after the landing in Italy, 41 pictures came through the air and landed safely on top of the Pentagon building, in a little room marked "Confidential—Keep Out."

Inside that room is a little machine not as big as a typewriter, with a little cylinder on it. The cylinder spins around, exposing a negative to dots and dashes of light, and after seven minutes, the exposure is complete. From there on, it's merely a matter of developing the negative, and the U. S. public has a picture of the landings in Italy, or the surrender of the Italian fleet.

And ditto for the South Pacific. It is farther away, but the seven minute requirement still holds. From an unmentionable post in Australia, the dots of light flash into the little room, and you have a picture of General MacArthur flying in a bomber over New Guinea.

The pictures may have been taken by any one of the four photo syndicates—Acme, AP, INP, or Life—or they may have been taken by the Army Signal service. In any case, they can be telephotoed only by the official airwaves.

What would be a highly expensive daily transmission cost for the photo agencies is thus fully borne by the war department. Officials justify the cost in terms of keeping the public abreast of the war—in fact, only seven minutes away from the war.

Manpower-Draft Situation Is Nation's No. 1 Problem

Political Shadows Darken Vital Issues Confronting Every Family; National Service Act Subject to Debate.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

Today, a whole year stands between election day and the capital but the shadow of coming events cast their shadows before them. Like the dark patches on the ground when scudding clouds cross the sun, the Washington scene is flecked with politics.

And there are issues this time which reach right into every home, touch the family where there are men and women of fighting or working age, reach into the larder and the ice box. It is hard for anyone to see these issues clearly because of the shadow of politics.

There is the draft, the manpower question closely interwoven with it, there is food, its production, its distribution, rationing and prices.

It takes a keen eye to see where merit ends and politics begins.

When Senator Wheeler, fathering the deferment of draft for pre-Pearl Harbor fathers, said the defeat of his measure would be a blow at morale and the nation's children, there was no reason to believe that he was insincere. Certainly there was no insincerity about the army and navy heads who opposed the measure, explaining that there were just so many men of fighting age and physique and that a certain job had to be done.

But to a reporter who has been reporting the doings of mice and men for more than a quarter of a century, I could not help suspecting some of the folk who battled over this legislation. What a juicy morsel it was for the vote-getteri True, the Wheeler bill aimed to exempt those who, with no foreknowledge of war, produced families without a thought that babies, to quote the ancient wheeze, like weatherstrips, could keep them out of the draft. But what about other fathers, quite as Pearl Harborish in their paternity whose offspring sprang after the deadline simply because time or opportunity had lingered?

President's Views

There was no doubt what the President thought when he talked about men with children who were doing no useful thing and who might, if they wished immunity from military service, easily get into a war industry. They, one opponent of the Wheeler bill said, were told that they had no responsibility in the war effort, at home or at the front.

Of course, this argument would not hold if the National Service act, that nightmare of politicians, were passed. The army wants it, Senator Austin and Representative Wadsworth who introduced it, and their followers want it—the White House has never spoken but of late is silent when it is "said to be willing."

Now politics, long before the election winds started blowing, has dulled men's minds on that subject. Manpower Commissioner McNutt has been willing but not emphatic. Perhaps you never read the contents of a recent statement issued through the Office of War Information from the Manpower commission. I have treasured it and want to quote its first sentences:

"Better utilization of our work force is the primary means of getting the manpower needed to supply productive establishments of the nation." (You and I can understand that, despite the fine four and five-syllable derivatives.)

"Labor reserves in shortage areas have been exhausted and the common lack of community services and facilities in such areas usually makes it impossible or undesirable to bring in more workers." (Also quite understandable, on a little thought, but would it make you rush out and hunt for a defense job?)

"Where there has been rapid mobilization of manpower, utilization is not always at its highest level. This is not necessarily a reflection on employers. When a plant has expanded its labor force several times, examples of ineffective use of manpower are certain to follow."

There is a careful exposition of the situation for you! Now what could the man who wrote that be running for? Somewhere where there were a lot of toes to be stepped on, it would seem, for he certainly was pussyfooting among the polysyllabics.

Situation Is Serious

And yet the manpower situation is serious. It is so serious that it has long worried War Mobilization Director Byrnes. Indeed, that is why he called on his friend, Bernard Baruch, the unofficial elder statesman of the administration, to advise him. Baruch advised him all right, not wisely perhaps, from a political standpoint, and too well for the sensitive olfactory nerve of Republican Senator Vandenberg (who used to be a newspaper man himself). The wily Michigander scented a rodent. Had he not, you might never have heard Baruch's words of wisdom.

Among other things, Mr. Baruch commented on hoarding labor. I had heard of that subject in indignant letters from the wives of workers who wrote that their husbands were paid to loaf. And Senator Wheeler made similar charges and recalled that Senator Truman and his doughty investigators had found a lot of hoarding of labor with (as Wheeler put it) "employees falling over each other" and being paid for on the cost-plus basis.

Testimony before congress had insisted that there were no cost-plus contracts under which labor hoarding would be profitable.

That was when Vandenberg arose and waved the Baruch report which he had demanded and finally received from Mr. Byrnes.

Mr. Vandenberg read Mr. Baruch's words on the subject of cost-plus:

"The government pays all the costs, whatever they are. Since the government is footing the bill, there is no incentive for the manufacturers to economize in the use of material, facilities or labor. More workers are hired than needed. Workers stand idle—it costs the manufacturer nothing. Much labor is wasted."

Political Breezes

This is only one item in the long and forthright document which has had considerable publicity. Perhaps it might have been neglected if it had not been blown into the public's face by the political breezes stirred up by Mr. Vandenberg. Perhaps Mr. Vandenberg might not have generated those breezes if Mr. Baruch had not been pretty critical of government agencies that competed for power; perhaps Mr. Baruch would not have been so frank if he had not thought that, as he requested, the report was not for publication.

Mr. Byrnes, when he sent the document to "Dear Van" at the latter's insistence, said that it was not intended for other than private use but that it was "a splendid argument in favor of action taken by the War Mobilization committee" (in regard to the labor situation on the West coast) and he requested that it be placed in the Congressional Record, which it was.

And so there it was for all to see with Mr. Baruch, presumably still the best of democratic pals but also the severest of critics, lambasting jealous government agencies and calling manufacturers "manufacturers" and not "productive establishments" and apologizing for nobody, business men or bureaucrats.

Thus the political breezes blow, sometimes in one direction, sometimes in another, though, of course, in election years the "outs" usually blow the loudest. They are the prosecuting attorney, and the "ins" are the defense.

However, there is this satisfaction, blow where it will, it is an ill wind that blows nobody good.

Diary of a Broadcaster

The other day, at the President's usual press and radio conference, I was interrupted, for Fala, the President's scotty, walked out between the forest of legs and made one of the most thorough trouser-cuff inspections I had ever seen.

Unfortunately, I had on one of those liberty suits with no cuffs so he started to pass me by and I had to engage him in conversation to get his attention at all.

What he said was not to be attributed—I can only say that I learned from authoritative Scotch circles that the newspaper and radio fraternity displayed a lot of scents.

Paint and Chintz Transform Chair

THERE is a knack about selecting the right thing from the assortment of junk in Mother's attic or a second hand furniture store. Here is a rocker not at all quaint but just awkward to have around. What you need is a chair that will push against the wall; that may be used at a desk or for a place of honor at the head of the table. The chair you want is there in that old rocker. You must see it in your mind's eye.

Off come the rockers and on go a set of casters and a seat cushion to make it the right height. That will make it useful but still no beauty. A remnant of flowered chintz will cover the cushion and the objectionable part of the carved back. Paint to match the soft blue background of the chintz will bring the whole thing together and soften too prominent curves.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Heat and friction are the greatest enemies of rubber. Tire treads wear out five times as fast in a temperature of 100 degrees as when the thermometer registers 40 degrees.

Rubber previously used for garden hose will provide for tires on carriages of 8,500 "7.5's" and 6,800 37-mm. anti-aircraft guns and 600 pontons for Army bridges.

Samuel Peal was granted the first rubber patent in England in 1791. It covered the waterproofing of leather, cotton, linen, etc.

Speaking of Sports

ALTHOUGH Erwin Rudolph won his first pocket billiards championship in 1911, the genial cue shark is more active today than he was as a mere stripling of 30 or 35.

On Labor day of 1942, Rudolph started an exhibition tour which has taken him to army camps in all parts of the United States. His first stop was at Fort Ontario in Oswego, N. Y. From there he went to Key West, Fla., finally winding up deep in the heart of Texas the following June. So far he has visited at least 200 camps, played in 600 exhibitions and demonstrated his uncanny ability through the co-operation of Brunswick - Balke, the company which underwrites his army camp tour.

Rudolph, who will be 50 in December, started playing billiards back in 1909, when he was 15. Just a year and a half later he won the Ohio State pocket billiards championship. In 1927 he annexed his first world's championship by defeating Ralph Greenleaf 450 to 386.

Rudolph's Record

After taking the title from Greenleaf in 1927, Rudolph went on to win it again in 1930, 1933 and 1941. His last victory was at the expense of Willie Mosconi and Irving Crane, both of whom he defeated in the playoffs.

In talking to Rudolph, one gets the firm impression that he is much happier demonstrating his wares before the boys in army camps than he was—and is—in championship competition. And it isn't a question of nerves. He just likes to entertain the boys.

"It would be impossible to find a more interested and appreciative audience than the boys in the army camps," he declares. "Most of them understand the fundamentals of the game and are with the player all the time. It's worth traveling any distance just to perform for the boys."

The game of billiards is definitely on the rebound, according to Rudolph. He feels—and with justification—that it will come back strong after the war. Thousands of service men who never played before are taking an interest in the game. As many as 200 billiard tables are found in some of the camps, and as many as 2,500 men have witnessed some of his exhibitions. That this builds interest in the game is proved by the following excerpt from one of the many letters Rudolph's employers have received from commanding officers of army camps where he has appeared:

". . . As you can well imagine, since Mr. Rudolph's appearance, the interest in pocket billiards has taken on new life and we truly are developing some great players."

Repeat Performances

The letters Rudolph receives speak volumes. They tell of the tremendous amount of camp interest and are almost unanimous in requesting a repeat performance.

The former champion entertains with exhibitions of both pocket billiards and trick shots. Many of the latter shots were first used by Rudolph and now are a standard fixture in other players' routines.

In talking to beginners, Rudolph emphasizes three fundamental rules. The first of these—the forming of a firm "bridge" with the left hand—he terms one of the most important factors in the game. He also cautions that the cue must be held very loosely at the balance, with the shooting arm relaxed, and finally that, when stroking the ball, the head should be kept absolutely still, as in golf.

In addition, he warns beginners to refrain from using "english"—the controlled spin imparted to the cue ball when it is stroked. "English will come naturally as you learn the game," he says. "It cannot be taught successfully."

Unlike many of the topnotch billiard players, Rudolph has refused to branch out into balkline or three-cushion billiards. He concentrates on pocket billiards, and that concentration has brought him a just reward. Always sure of himself—but far from cocky—he is known as a fast player. He plays as rapidly in tournament competition as he does during exhibitions.

Added to his other qualifications is modesty. Asked to name his choice for today's greatest pocket billiards player, he replied: "Willie Mosconi."

Bring Out Bean Pots for Guest Dinners!
(See Recipe Below)

Company Nights

You may be on a strict ration budget, but it isn't necessary to ration hospitality if you plan the food and entertainment wisely. Food and pleasant conversation shared with friends make the long, cool nights, and work-filled days easier to share. Plan soon to have someone over for you can do it with today's recipes without stretching the ration or budget book out of joint.

Dishes should be hearty enough to satisfy any man-sized appetites you encounter, but pretty enough to draw compliments, too. Have things easy to fix so that you can have plenty of time to take part in the social activities of the evening.

Enlist the help of the children in setting up the tables, polishing silverware and glasses. They'll like doing it and it will ease the load on you.

Baked beans are grand for fall entertaining and they really make those points go a long way. They certainly answer the need for heartiness to satisfy appetites fanned by the coolness in the air, and when served in attractive casseroles with gay table background, they answer the beauty requirement.

If you make the beans yourself, a little pork goes a long way when it travels with other such savory foods as mustard, molasses, brown sugar, tomato sauce and vinegar.

Home Baked Beans.
(Serves 6 to 8)

2 cups navy beans
¼ pound fat salt pork
1½ teaspoons salt
¼ cup brown sugar
½ teaspoon dry mustard
3 tablespoons molasses
1 small onion, quartered
½ cup catsup, if desired

Wash beans. Cover with water and soak them overnight. Cook slowly until the skins burst or until just tender. Drain, reserving liquor. Place half the beans in bean pot or casserole. Bury a slice of pork in beans and another slice in the remaining ingredients. Add remaining beans and seasonings. Place remaining salt pork over the top. Cover with bean liquor. Cover and bake in a slow oven (250 to 300 degrees) 6 to 8 hours. If necessary, add more liquid.

Individual bean pots make serving simpler. The beans may be baked in small pots, or, if desired, baked in a large pot, ladled out into small pots before serving.

Relax your taut nerves and forget war worries by serving a delicious decaffeinated coffee—hot or cold. If making the coffee in a percolator, it needs slightly longer to bring out the full, rich coffee flavor.

Boston brown bread is the traditional accompaniment for baked beans. Slice it very thin, spread with butter or cream cheese, whichever suits your palate best.

Lynn Says:

Point Savers: Discarding leftovers is waste for they can make many a meal, and a nice one. Use leftover meats or poultry and a combination of vegetables, and tuck that under a flaky pie-crust for a wonderful meat saver. Remember pie crust is packed with energy value because of the shortening.

Try high quality shortening for making pastry. It is fresh and sweet, doesn't have to be kept in the refrigerator and is of a nice texture to blend with flour.

To roll pie dough thin, cover board with a heavy muslin, and rolling pin with a child's white sock.

Another dish worthy of consideration on cool nights for entertaining is this ground meat pie—that serves six with just a pound of meat:

Hamburger Pie.
(Serves 6)

1 medium-sized onion, chopped
1 pound ground beef
Salt and pepper
2½ cups green beans
1 can condensed tomato soup
5 medium-sized potatoes, cooked
½ cup warm milk
1 beaten egg
Salt and pepper

Brown onion in hot fat; add milk and seasonings. Brown. Add beans and soup. Pour into a greased casserole. Mash potatoes, add milk, egg and seasonings. Spoon in mounds over meat. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) 30 minutes.

A waffle supper is another way of entertaining which can be inexpensive and consume only a few points. There are loads of things to do with waffles—either for main course or desserts. Make plain waffles and serve them with creamed chicken or leftover veal creamed with mushrooms. For desserts, try them with berries or fruit or a combination of ice cream and fruit or berries.

Walnuts in waffles make them taste wonderfully good. Serve a few tender, sizzling link sausages with these for a particularly tempting late evening snack:

Walnut Waffles.
(Makes 4 to 6 waffles)

2 well-beaten egg yolks
1½ cups milk
2 cups pastry flour
¼ teaspoon salt
4 teaspoons baking powder
6 tablespoons oil
2 stiffly beaten egg whites
1 cup broken walnut kernels

Combine beaten egg yolks and milk. Add flour sifted together with salt and baking powder, then add oil. Beat until smooth, fold in egg whites and nuts. Bake in ungreased waffle iron.

As meat shortages become more acute, cereals are once more taking their place in the American diet. Spaghetti, macaroni, noodles, etc., all belong to the cereal family and may be used admirably for meat stretchers and substitutes. Combine them with one of the complete protein foods such as meat or cheese and you have a very satisfying, filling dish. Here's a dish fortified with grated cheese and another protein food, eggs:

Baked Eggs on Spaghetti.
(Serves 8)

1½ cups spaghetti
2 tablespoons butter or substitute
4 tablespoons flour
1 teaspoon salt
2 cups milk
1 cup American-style grated cheese
8 eggs
Buttered crumbs

Cook spaghetti in 4 quarts boiling salted water until tender. Drain. Add melted butter. Add flour and salt mixed thoroughly. Pour in milk gradually. Cook, stirring constantly until thick. Add cheese and blend. Mix with spaghetti. Pour into shallow, greased baking dish. Break eggs onto spaghetti, sprinkle with buttered crumbs and salt. Bake in a slow oven (300 degrees) about 30 minutes or until eggs are cooked.

"REGULAR" AGAIN AFTER 2 WEEKS!

"Cereal Brought Relief from Long Siege of Purgatives!"

Here's a sincere, unsolicited letter every disappointed "doser" will want to read:

"I was a sufferer from common constipation. Took pills or medicines of some kind, but got no lasting relief. Finally, I tried KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN. Have been eating it about 2 weeks now, and have stopped taking pills and things. My bowels move regularly every day. I am a KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN eater from now on!" Mr. Burl Brown, Warren, Ark.

How do scientists explain KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN'S gentle-acting, amazing relief, so familiar to thousands? Simply this: Lack of certain cellulosic elements in the diet is a common cause of constipation. KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN is one of Nature's richest sources of these elements —which help the intestinal flora lighten and fluff up the contents of the colon, for easy, natural elimination. Not a purgative, that robs the system of water. Not "roughage" that acts by "sweeping you out"! ALL-BRAN is a gentle-acting, "regulating" food!

Eat KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN regularly. Drink plenty of water. See if it doesn't give you the relief you've dreamed of. Insist on genuine ALL-BRAN, made only by Kellogg's in Battle Creek.

From where I sit . . .
by Joe Marsh

Pete Swanson fancies himself as an armchair strategist. Sometimes he gets so tangled up, I just can't resist tryin' to straighten him out.

For instance, the other day he was waxing indignant about our soldiers being allowed to buy beer right in camp. Said that was just coddling the troops and would ruin discipline.

I told him the actual facts had already been established by a study the Government made. Their report said chaplains and the military police agree that instead of ruining discipline, 3.2 beer sold in Army camps provides our soldiers with a mild form of relaxation without impairing their efficiency.

Well, Pete allowed that the chaplains and military police are a pretty good authority on what's right for soldiers. I've noticed lately he's been confining his remarks to the broader phases of strategy.

Referendum To Be Held By Burley Tobacco Growers

A burley tobacco referendum has been announced for Saturday, October 23rd, 1943.

Tobacco growers may vote on one of three questions: (1) Are you in favor of Marketing Quotas for 3 years. (2) Are you opposed to Marketing Quotas for 3 years, but favor a quota for 1 year. (3) Are you opposed to Quotas. A two thirds majority of eligible votes cast is necessary to have Quotas, as was the case in the last referendum.

An eligible voter is any owner, tenant or share cropper, who shares in the 1943 tobacco crop.

If Marketing Quotas are in effect supplies of tobacco should not be burdensome and production can be maintained in line with demands. Land and labor which, otherwise, would be used for excessive production of tobacco will be available for the production of war crops, also prices will be supported at 90% of parity, which is about .30c per pound.

20% increase in tobacco allotments for 1944, above the 1943 Marketing Quota allotment has already been approved for burley tobacco growers.

An instruction meeting of the referendum committee was held a the county office on Wednesday, October 13th.

All burley tobacco growers will be notified of the time and place for holding the referendum, and they are urged to vote on this important question.

Annual Meeting Held October 5th By Homemakers

"Women on the Home Front" was the theme of the 8th Annual Meeting of the Boone County Homemakers, which was held at the Florence Methodist Church, Tuesday, October 6th. Mrs. Alan Gaines, Walton, president, called the meeting to order at 10:30 C. W. T.

Shredding Fodder Helps Increase Feeding Values

Shredding of fodder (stover) increase the total feeding value according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. Farmers who are likely to experience any hay shortage should seriously consider the use of shredded fodder for the young stock and cattle that are to be roughed thru the winter.

While the shredding of fodder under normal times may be questionable as to a profitable practice it may pay well under present conditions, especially when the refuse fodder may take the place of straw that has been selling at around $20.00 per ton. The use of shredded fodder also gives one of the most effective controls for European corn borer.

A survey of the available corn shredders in the county was made the past week by Rev. Will Smith, farm labor assistant. The survey shows that there are at least five shredders in the county. They are owned by E. A. Martin of Idewild, Harold Crigler of Hebron, C. G. Crisler farm of North Bend bottoms, Orville Kelly of Rabbit Hash and Val B. Dolwick of Limaburg.

Mr. Martin is the only operator who on Monday of this week had said he would definitely do custom work. He states he has a good outfit and will charge 25c per shock for shredding. Other operators will also plan to do custom work.

Fodder should be shredded as early as possible after the first freeze. Fodder left in the field until January first has usually lost more than fifty percent of its feeding value.

The baling of fodder is another practice to save the feeding value of the corn crop. Where the fodder can be baled and put in the dry it will prove a profitable practice on many farms. The use of silo fillers in the place of corn shredders will also prove a valuable aid where the later equipment is not available.

Boone County Praised For Exceeding Quota In Third War Loan Drive

"I have always thought Boone county was a good county, and now I think it is better than ever," Edward A. Vosmer, district chairman of the Third War Loan Drive, told a large gathering of precinct chairmen and other workers who sent Boone county $200,00 over its quota Friday night. His address was heard at a dinner meeting at Doc's Place, Dixie Higway near Florence.

Mr. Vosmer, president of the First National Bank & Trust Co., Covington, told of how Boone county's quota was doubled and $100,000 added to it for the Third War Loan Drive. "I couldn't see how on earth you could make it," Mr. Vosmer said, adding, "I take off my hat to you, and I don't think there is anything impossible for Boone county to do in any of these drives."

A. B. Renaker, chairman of the Boone county drive and toastmaster at the dinner meeting, told the workers, "we have won a great battle, but it doesn't mean that we have won the war. As long as this war goes on all of us will have to keep busy in some kind of a drive or another. When our boys overseas win one battle they don't sit down and say the war is won. They keep going, fighting battle after battle. That is what we must do here at home."

Boone Circuit Clerk A. D. Yelton, co-chairman of the drive and Al Reik, Ft. Thomas, assistant vice president of the Fifth-Third Union Trust Co., Cincinnati, who served as liason officer for the drive in the local district, praised the workers for their accomplishments.

In an address opening the National War Fund Drive in Boone County, Judge John L. Vest, chairman of the drive, citing the division of the War Fund dollar in providing USO Organizations, United Seamens Service, War Prisioners Aid and Refugee Relief, Judge Vest said "The War Fund Dollars given are to meet human suffering and need among our own and among our allies."

Boone County's quota in the War Fund Drive is $3,023.11. A check for $23.11 was handed to Mr. Vest by Edward A. Vosmer and Al Reik to start the drive off with an even amount to raise.

Walter Vest, who was recently given an honorable discharge, after serving 10 months with the U. S. Army, told of the various organizations backed by the War Fund and how much they mean to the morale of the service men.

The dinner was sponsored by the Carrollton Tobacco Warehouse Company which is 50 percent owned by George W. Baker, John L. Vest and Walter Vest.

ON THE HOME FRONT

—with RUTH WYETH SPEARS

SOME people have a talent for making guests comfortable and they are not always the people with big houses and what used to be called a spare room. Many a homemaker today is graciously sharing limited space in a house or apartment because war conditions make her feel that is part of her contribution.

This sketch shows an ingenious frame under which a folding cot may be stored in a hall or other out-of-the-way corner. The frame has a full skirted cover of denim trimmed in bands of flowered chintz. On top there stands a medicine closet with feet made by gluing spools in place. This cabinet gives a convenient place for toilet articles and the mirror door is well lighted with wall brackets connected with a floor outlet.

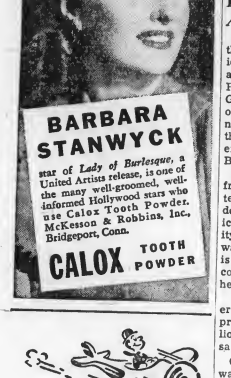
Early Smoking



When tobacco was first introduced in England during the 16th century, it was literally worth its weight in gold—a pound of tobacco was commonly sold for an equal weight of silver and coins.

The art of smoking was also regarded most seriously, and it was considered a disgrace not to be able to inhale smoke through the nose. There were even professors of smoking who initiated beginners into the mysteries of inhaling and blowing smoke rings.

BRITAIN'S HIDDEN TAXES

British taxes on some items are interesting in the light of Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau's request for 10½ billion dollars of new revenue, part of which would be raised by taxation of goods.

FORTRESS EUROPE:
Allies at Walls

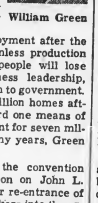
With the big battle yet to come, Allied forces sparred with the Nazis all along the outer wall of Fortress Europe.

In Italy, the Americans and British moved slowly northward toward Rome through stubborn Nazi rearguard action. Entrenched in the rugged terrain, the Germans held back Allied troops with mortar and machine-gun fire, only giving up their ground to move to new positions when Clark and Montgomery brought up superior concentrations of artillery and men.

In an attempt to draw out the German fleet for a fight, British and American naval units raided the Nazis' shipping center of Bodoe in northern Norway. But the German fleet refused to be lured into the trap.

In the Aegean sea, the Nazis recaptured the islands of Kos and Leros, which serve as bases from which an invasion fleet moving into Greece can be shelled and bombed.

SOUTHWEST PACIFIC:
Madang Next



Holding the initiative, Allied forces moved swiftly up the northeastern coast of New Guinea, to clean out remaining Jap air and sea bases in this area of Australasia.

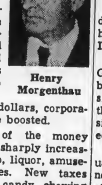
Latest Allied goal was Madang, another of the strong points which the Japanese established to harass any force attempting to move northward by sea or land. "Driving forward through tropical country, the Allies neared the first ring of Madang's defenses, apparently manned by a medium-sized garrison, of the type being sacrificed by the enemy command in brief holding engagements.

Pressed in by superior Allied forces in the central Solomons, the Japs were evacuating the island of Kolambangara and moving their troops to the north by barge. Although the Japs moved the barges by night, concentrations were discovered along the shores by day, and these were peppered by Allied fliers.

LABOR:
AFL Meets

Lahor's goal after the war will be the establishment of free, democratic trade unions in all countries, AFL President William Green declared in opening the 63rd annual convention of the American Federation of Labor in Boston.

William Green



Survival of the free enterprise system in the U. S. will depend upon American business' ability to provide employment after the war, Green said. Unless production is stimulated, the people will lose confidence in business leadership, he declared, and turn to government.

The need for 15 million homes after the war will afford one means of providing employment for seven million workers for many years, Green said.

Chief interest of the convention was the AFL's action on John L. Lewis' application for re-entrance of the United Mine Workers into the organization. Although bitterly opposed by some factions, there were indications the path might be cleared for accepting Lewis through further negotiations.

TAXES:
Ask for More

To add to present collections of 38 billion dollars, Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau asked congress to raise an additional 10½ billion dollars in new taxes.

Henry Morgenthau

Morgenthau proposed raising 6½ billion dollars by increasing personal income taxes and cutting exemptions for dependents. To bring in another 1 billion, 100 million dollars, corporation taxes would be boosted.

The remainder of the money would be raised by sharply increasing taxes on tobacco, liquor, amusements and luxuries. New taxes would be placed on candy, chewing gum, soft drinks and greeting cards. Morgenthau also recommended broadening of the social security program to include practically all workers and provide temporary disability and hospitalization benefits.

On hearing Morgenthau's proposals, Rep. Robert Doughton said: "I do not see at this time how we can make the full increases requested."

DRAFT:
Senate Acts

With Sen. Burton Wheeler's bill to defer the drafting of fathers until January 1 doomed, the senate acted on a substitute measure of Sen. Josiah Bailey, designed to tighten grounds for deferment of government employees, and providing for the appointment of a commission to re-examine physical standards so as to permit use of many present 4F's.

Senator Bailey's bill also included a proposal of Sen. Robert Taft, under which no deferment could be granted unless the appeals board of the district where the employer makes the request gives its approval.

Although the majority of the draft boards held off the induction of fathers until congress acted on the issue, dads were being called in some instances. All told, 446,000 were supposed to he drafted by January 1 under the services' announced plans. However, the senate debate revealed that many more may be drafted because of navy demands.

WHEAT:
Restrict Feed

Commodity Credit corporation sales of wheat to feed mixers must be used for dairy cows and laying hens only, the War Food administration announced. At the same time, the WFA said "an effort is being made to discourage the feeding of market hogs to weights in excess of 200 pounds, or of beef cattle beyond fair to good finish."

To aid in relieving the eastern feed shortage, CCC revealed it was seeking to import wheat from South America, with the amount to be brought in determined by the shipping available. No corn could be imported, CCC said, because drouth has crippled the crop.

To encourage the accumulation of a larger country corn inventory by butyl alcohol and butyl acetate producers, OPA redefined a bushel of corn as of 56 pounds weight and 15.5 per cent moisture. Since the price of the chemicals had been tied to a base cost of a bushel of corn, high moisture content failed to reflect true margins.

Sees City's End

Because the automobile, airplane and helicopter will reduce travel time, more and more people will abandon congested cities and move to outlying districts, says Frank Lloyd Wright, one of the foremost leaders in the development of modern architecture.

Frank Lloyd Wright

The home of the future will contain much glass to permit sunshine and light, Wright says, and each one will have a little farm. Smoke will be eliminated through the development of modern heating systems, Wright predicts, and the entire country will be electrified.

HOGS:
Reach Ceiling

On the first day price ceilings on live hogs went into effect in the Chicago stockyards, virtually all classes of pigs brought producers the $14.75 a hundred pounds top.

Buyers paid $14.75 for good 170 to 500 pounders and good sows from 500 to 450 pounds. Good 140 to 160 pounders and 475 to 700 pound sows brought from $14.50 to $14.75.

In all, 20 major markets received 87,000 hogs on the first day of the price ceiling, 51,000 below the preceding week. In Chicago, the lighter receipts were reflected in a general price rise, resulting in almost the same return for all grades.

RUSSIA:
'Hold Line'—Hitler

Flying to the Nazis' Dnieper river defense line, Adolf Hitler addressed his generals in these words: "Here I am, and here I shall stand."

As Hitler spoke, the last of the German rear-guards were falling back to the new lines, and the Russians encountered stiff resistance as they approached the Nazis' main positions. Driving rain further impeded the Reds' march.

Finland, Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania were included in the Nazis' new defense line. Except for a stretch in the north and one in the south, the new line was anchored on the west bank of the Dnieper river.

Broad along most of its course, with steep western banks, the Dnieper offers strong means of resistance. The Germans have massed artillery on these western banks to shell Russians concentrating for attack.

BRITISH NAVY:
New Chief

To tough, 59-year-old Admiral Andrew Browne Cunningham went Great Britain's most responsible fighting assignment, first sea lord and chief of naval staff.

Sir A. B. Cunningham

Cunningham's appointment followed the Italian fleet's surrender to the Allies after it had been driven to cover by superior British forces under his command. An old navy man, Cunningham served in the Mediterranean during the First World war, and in the South Atlantic waters during the Boer war.

To Cunningham will fall the responsibility for operating the great naval armada upon which Britain depends for keeping its supply lines open, in war and peace.

Cunningham succeeds Adm. Dudley Pound, often called the "father" of the British navy's modern aggressive tactics.

BOMB EUROPE:
Hit Nazi Industry

Continuing to hammer the German industrial machine, American Flying Fortresses struck Frankfort in a daylight raid, using high level precision methods to pick out and destroy production areas. Twelve hours later, a huge British force followed up the attack, dropping 500 tons of bombs, and leaving many sections of the big city burning. Motors, chemicals and tires are manufactured there.

Other targets in western and northern Germany were also assaulted by Fortresses and Liberators, one force disrupting installations at the Nazi-held air base at St. Dizier, France. All flights were escorted by P-47 Thunderbolts, and all reported meeting violent opposition.

Because the Germans have massed anti-aircraft guns around industrial installations and concentrated on fighter plane production, bombings of Europe have become more difficult, it has been revealed.

OIL:
More From Others

Nations with surplus stocks of petroleum should be encouraged to increase production and thereby forestall the depletion of the United States' reserves, a group of western senators and representatives whose states are facing reductions in gasoline rations declared. Mexico and Venezuela in particular were mentioned as countries that could increase their outputs of crude oil substantially.

HIGHLIGHTS . . . in the week's news

SPENDING: Higher individual incomes resulting from the war boom have boosted sales of various luxuries, a survey by the Northwestern National Life Insurance company shows. The figures reveal that sales of "quality" women's dresses have risen 60 per cent above a year ago, furs 66 per cent, jewelry 35 per cent, playing cards, 56 per cent, and cigarettes 17 per cent.

Three-Nation Agreement Essential to World Peace

Evidence Points to Existence of Conciliatory Atmosphere Between U. S., Russia, England; Common Sense Pact Necessary.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

Through the past days, Washington has been anxiously watching a very trying, very delicate and difficult operation — the attempt to break in a stubborn three-horse team which has never pulled together before.

The difficult journey toward an understanding to he reached by personal conversations across the table between Britain, the United States and Russia has begun. Following perhaps secret tripartite conferences between representatives of the three nations is the planned meeting of the heads of the three foreign offices. Questions frankly discussed with unsolved problems left open (if plans don't go amiss) will then be taken up between Roosevelt, Stalin and Churchill personally.

It is a tremendous undertaking. This three-horse team has never run in harness together before. America has never been harnessed at all; Soviet Russia has had only one short and violent experience—that with Germany—which ended in disaster; and as for Britain, she is accustomed to being lead-horse; therefore, a lot of patience will he needed to hitch all three abreast.

There is a whole library of documentation to prove that an all-for-one, one-for-all agreement among these three nations is impossible. But it must be remembered that there were 13 powerful reasons once why a United States of America was impossible too.

The present goal is not the formation of a triple alliance. The present problem is simply to get a common sense agreement between three nations without which a post-war situation is hound to arise which Prime Minister Churchill described as "confusion." And when he used that word, he made a new high for English understatement. Few doubt that he meant war.

Arguments Against

As I said, there are plenty of reasons which can be cited why the United States and Britain and Russia cannot possibly agree but there are other reasons why they can.

There are two things which stand out in most people's minds as evidences that Stalin is not playing ball now and doesn't want to. One is the recurrent complaint in the official Russian press and earlier statements by Stalin himself to the effect that Russia is decidedly displeased with the Allies for not having built a second front by invading Europe from the British Isles. The other is the Moscow sponsorship of a Free Germany committee which appears to hold out better terms to Germany than unconditional surrender which the Allies demand.

Recently, I talked with a military man who suggested that perhaps the call for a second front after the invasion of Italy was part of an agreement with the Allies to confuse Germany. Churchill has said that he was assured by Stalin, when the Russian drive began this summer, that the Russians were confident that they could withstand German attack. As things have turned out, the Germans have not been able to counterattack. They have ordered a general retreat. It was admitted by military experts at first that this is a planned and orderly retreat. After the invasion of Italy, the Germans admitted that it was a general retreat. Now it looks like a rout. In other words, the creation of the "third front" in the Mediterranean has forced the Germans to give up the idea of attempting a counter-offensive. But since the slender hope of Hitler lies in dissension among the United Nations, why should Russia let him know that she was satisfied with any Allied action?

Free Germany Committee

As to the Free Germany committee, Russia itself has not made any direct official statement concerning it, has not officially backed up its program. It is composed of German prisoners in Russia who demand of their fellow-countrymen that Germany get rid of her present rulers and surrender. That in itself is something everyone wants to see. How much short of unconditional surrender that is, certainly is open to friendly discussion. We know that it worked in regard to the Italian surrender terms.

Now, what are the main propositions which Britain, America and Russia do not see eye to eye?

In the first place, there is the question of "spheres of influence"—the Balkans, the Middle East, the Mediterranean.

I have been told by persons presuming to speak with authority, that Russia suggested the creation of the Mediterranean commission, a body made up of representatives from Moscow, London and Washington, meeting on equal terms. That commission, whoever thought it up, was agreed upon. Historically, Britain has always refused Russia any hand in Mediterranean affairs. That would seem to be a step forward and even before the commission could start functioning, Russia was allowed to have her say concerning the terms of the Italian surrender. Agreement was reached as to the terms.

That would seem to indicate that a conciliatory atmosphere has been created in advance. Unless Russia is absolutely unwilling to make compromises, we can expect reciprocation when the questions of the Balkans and the Middle East arise, where there have always been similar conflict of interests.

The Baltic States

Another very sensitive question is the difference of opinion as to the treatment of the small nations which lie on Russia's western frontiers, notably the Baltic states. It is said that Russia feels that as soon as the German armies are driven back into the Reich, these border states, especially Lithuania and Estonia, a part of Poland and perhaps a part of Rumania (we leave the others aside for the moment, including Finland) are an integral part of Russia.

The United States, on the other hand, has always stood for the rights of small nations, for self-determination. Of course, Russia argues that plebiscites which indicate a desire to join the Soviet Republics have already been taken in part of the territory and if they were taken again, they would show the same results. That they express the will of the Nationals is denied by representatives of these countries in Washington.

Great Britain leans toward an acceptance of Russia's views however. The point has yet to be settled with the United States.

An additional point, which is really the one which has always caused suspicion on the part of Britain and America, is the question of communist propaganda spread by Russia for the purpose of overthrowing all capitalist governments. This is balanced by the fear on the part of Russia that capitalist governments are bent on destroying her as a communist state.

This is a tough one admittedly but not beyond the solution by honest men. Nor do honest men despair of its settlement.

Post-War Russia

From a purely cynical and material standpoint, it can be argued that post-war Russians will not attempt any move against Britain or America, either from within by propaganda and intrigue or from without by military attack because they will be an exhausted nation when the war is over. Competent observers believe it will take several generations for Russia to recover. Therefore, Russia's chief advantage will be gained by co-operation with other nations rather than by threats of aggression. To some degree, that also applies to Britain. Unquestionably, the United States will emerge from the war the greatest military power in the world. Only a combination of powers could defeat her. There rests, then, the moral responsibility on America of wise and generous use of her power—noblesse oblige.

This, I admit, is the bright side of the medal. But until the attempts toward tripartite discussion and agreement have utterly failed, there is no reason why the medal should not be presented, shiny side up.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

Success of the Dutch in transplanting the quinine tree from Peru to Java helped encourage interest in the development of rubber plantations in the Far East in the early 1870's.

With all the discouragements of rubber and gasoline restrictions, automobile registrations at the end of 1942 were only 5 per cent lower than in 1941, a record year. Commercial vehicle registrations were down 5.5 per cent.

It is estimated that at one time there were between 300 million and 500 million wild rubber trees in the Amazon Valley and that less than 10 per cent have been tapped to date.

Fund For Maternity, Infant Care

More than 200,000 additional wives and babies of servicemen will be able to receive maternity and infant care during the remainder of this fiscal year as a result of the additional funds voted by Congress. The program is limited to wives and infants of enlisted men in the four lowest pay grades. Between July 1 and October 1, wives and infants of servicemen in the top three grades below commissioned officers were also covered.

Ammunition Prices Set

Ammunition for civilian use will be sold at or under prices prevailing in March, 1942, according to OPA ceilings which become effective October 7. Retail ceilings on boxes of 25 shotgun shells are $1.38 for 12 gauge and $1.32 for 16 and 20 gauge. Retail ceilings on boxes of 50 rim fire cartridges are 34 cents for .22 long rifle and 21 cents for .22 short, regular. Retail ceiling prices on boxes of 20 center fire cartridges range from $1.45 to $2.10 according to brand and type. Ammunition stores are required to post ceiling prices but may sell at lower prices.

The number of new passenger tires available for rationing in the October quota will be reduced by one-fifth, the OPA recently announced. Quota for farm tractor and implement tires for October is 59,800 as compared with 73,600 in September.

Germany Far From "Collapse"

The German Army has nearly three times as many combat divisions in the field today as there were when the attack on Poland began four years ago, Major General George V. Strong, Assistant Chief of Staff G-2 (Military Intelligence) declared recently. Discounting any likehood of an early collapse of either Germany or Japan, General Strong disclosed that the Germans had replaced the 20 divisions lost at Stalingrad last winter, and that the German Luftwaffe was larger now than in 1939. He said also that the weapons the Germans are making are in some cases better than any which the United Nations have.

Register For Book 4 In October

Exact dates and places for registering for war ration book four, which will take place during the latter part of October, can be obtained from local newspapers or radio stations. Persons registering must have a war ration book three for each person for whom they are obtaining book four. Stamps labeled "coffee' in book four were printed before coffee rationing was discontinued. Any rumors that it is to be resumed are unfounded, OPA says.

OPA Sets Apple Ceiling Prices

Apples for home consumption will sell at a season's national retail average of between 10 and 11 cents a pound. Maximum prices for apples were set recently as one of the first steps in OPA's program to extend control over the prices of fresh fruits and vegetables to keep down the cost of living. As in the case of eggs, prices will vary by the month to reflect storage and other charges.

Army-Navy Test For Students

The next qualifying test for the army specialized training program and the navy college program will be given in high schools and colleges, Tuesday, November 9, according to the War Department. The test is open to male graduates and high school seniors in their last semester who will reach their seventeenth birthday but not their twenty-second birthday by March 1, 1944. The test will provide an opportunity for these men to qualify for college training in studies for which the army and navy have vital needs. Graduates of the program will serve as specialists, technicians, and officers in the armed forces.

Restrict Feed Wheat Sales

Wheat sold by the Commodity Credit Corporation to feed mixers may be used only in making feeds for dairy cows and laying hens, the War Food Administration has announced.

Regulation of Household Auctions

Auctioneers-Sales for households are no longer exempt from the used consumer durable goods price regulation, OPA announced recently. The regulation originally exempted sales of used goods by householders, whether they were sold by the householder himself or by a professional auctioneer for the household. At the same time, OPA brought used household sewing machines under the price regulation when sold by an auctioneer.

WFA Gives Feeding Suggestions

To make the nation's supply of livestock feed produce the maximum amount of food, the War Food Administration says hogs should be marketed at lighter weights than during the past two years and 1944 spring farrowing should be held substantially below that of last spring. These measures will be necessary, WFA says, if livestock numbers and feed supply are to be held in balance. WFA urges very best use of roughage and pasture for sheep and cattle. In general, WFA points out, if feeders hold down the weights to which they feed their meat animals, they'll get maximum output of meat per pound of feed used. To conserve feed, WFA recommends heavy culling of range herds.

Farm Labor Situation Helped

Three hundred thousand more men of military age were put to work on farms during the first six months of this year than in the same months of 1942, because of draft deferment and other measures taken to conserve agricultural labor. This number was sufficient to offset net losses of workers of military age from farms during the last half of 1942, according to the department of agriculture.

Reports On War Against Inflation

Prices in the United States advanced only 12 percent in the first 19 months of the present war compared to 29.5 percent in the same period in the first world war, Judge Fred M. Vinson, Director of Economic Stabilization, reported on the first anniversary of the Stablization Act. "The war against rising prices has been a good example of democracy in action," Judge Vinson declared. "It has not been entirely free from selfishness and pettiness and difficulties of many kinds—Perhaps no struggle ever is." Credit for the achievement, he said, goes "to the workers who have abided by the - little steel - formula; to the farmers who have not needed the incentive of the prices witnessed during the last war to break all production records; to the thousands of businessmen, small and large, who have helped hold prices down," and to the American housewife for her cooperation with rationing and price control.

Helps Clarify Hog Ceilings

The word "municipality," inso far as used by OPA in setting ceiling prices on live hogs in various terminal and interior markets, includes also the hog markets in trade centers immediately adjacent to those cities. On Oct. 4, OPA set ceiling prices on live hogs in markets throughout the country, each price based on geographical location and type of selling place, but all prices hinged upon a ceiling of $14.75 a hundred in Chicago. In the U. S., live hogs produce the heaviest meat tonnage and contribute more to farm income than any other meat animal, OPA pointed out.

Used Egg Case Ceilings Higher

To encourage the gathering and reconditioning of used egg cases for the handling of this year's forecast egg crop of 60 billion eggs, OPA has increased the ceiling prices on used egg crates. The new ceilings, effective Monday, October 11, give the men who collected used cases for reconditioning a spread of 7 cents rather than 5 cents between the maximum prices they may pay "Emptiers" at top prices at which they may sell to reconditioners. This extra 2 cents is expected to encourage gathering of empty cases from retail grocers, dairy stores, neighborhood bakeries, and other small "emptiers." New ceilings also give reconditioners a spread of 10 cents for reconditioning used cases.

Brooms To Cost More

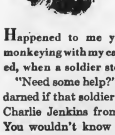
Consumers will pay about six cents more for household brooms made wholly or partly of broom corn, because of a recent OPA order. This increase was granted to reflect recently established ceiling prices for broom corn.

Gals To Get Bobbie Pins

Twice as many bobbie pins and hairpins, "necessary feminine items", will be produced during 1944 as at present, under a recent WPB action.

More Agricultural Fertilizer Available

Plans are being made to increase the supply of ammonium nitrate for use as an agricultural fertilizer, according to the War Production Board. The material has been so improved to prevent caking that orders received for September and October exceed the supply. Additional sodium nitrate became available for Agricultural fertilizer last April when government capacity to produce it began to exceed the amount needed for military explosives.



Save Water To Save Fuel

Because it usually takes fuel to pump water, the U. S. Government asks water users to repair leaky faucets and other leaky plumbing fixtures. Saving of water may also save on the manpower required to make it available as well as the chemicals required to treat it.

A WALTON LADY SPIT UP ACID LIQUIDS FOR HOURS AFTER EATING

For hours after every meal, a Walton lady used to spit up a strong, acidulous liquid mixed with pieces of half-digested food. She says it was awful. At times she would nearly strangle. She had stomach bloat, daily headaches and constant irregular bowel action. Today, this lady eats her meals and enjoys them. And she says the change is due to taking ERB-HELP. Her food agrees with her. No gas, bloat or spitting up after eating. She is also free of headaches now, and bowels are regular, thanks to this Remarkable New Compound.

ERB-HELP contains 12 Great Herbs; they cleanse bowels, clear gas from stomach, act on sluggish liver and kidneys. Miserable people soon feel different all over. So don't go on suffering! Get ERB-HELP. Jones Drug Store.

From where I sit...

by Joe Marsh

Happened to me yesterday. I'm monkeying with my car to get it started, when a soldier stops alongside.

"Need some help?" he asks. And darned if that soldier wasn't young Charlie Jenkins from Elm Street. You wouldn't know him after six months in the Army. Fifteen pounds heavier—straight and tan and real sure of himself. The Army's done a lot for Charlie—like it has for lots of other fellows.

Now I read how some folks worry about the soldiers havin' a glass of beer occasionally. After seein' Charlie, I don't think there's cause to fret.

Just like Charlie says—"if you can trust us with guns and ships and tanks, I guess you can trust us with a glass of beer once in a while."

And I know the beer industry is cooperating with the Army to see that beer is sold in good, clean, decent places.

SAVE THE SOIL

What would our food production be now, if during the last few years, soil improvement practices had not been emphacised, says C. Liston Hempfling, Chairman of the Boone County Soil Conservation Service.

Save the Soil not only to grow another bumper crop, but that we may have a more abundant living after the war.

The biggest soil saving practice we can now take part in is sowing cover crops. If at all possible sow all cultivated land to a cover crop. There are several good small grains to sow, but it is beginning to get late and it might be best to sow Balbo Rye and Wheat as first choice, or Common Rye and Barley as second choice.

Don't spend your pay in competition with your neighbors for scarce civilian goods. Save, America, and you will save America from black markets and runaway inflation. Buy more Bonds every payday. How many bonds? Figure it out yourself.

Transportation Chairman Named by R. L. Vincent.

Louisville, Ky., Oct.—Raymond L. Vincent, chairman of transportation of the State Democratic committee, announced today the appointment of a district chairman in each of Kentucky's nine congressional districts. A county chairman and three or more members were also named by the state chairman in each of the state's 120 counties.

R. L. Vincent, Williamstown was appointed chairman of the 5th congressional district.

The Boone County transportation committee is headed by C. D. Gaines, of R. 1, Burlingon Ky., chairman; and Robert Eades, Florence, Ben Zimmer, Jr., Florence, and Robert Brugh, Walton, committee members.

State Chairman Vincent, in a letter to all members of transportation committees throughout the state, pointed out the importance of the transportation committee in the oncoming election and announced that the county committees would assist those persons who expected to haul voters to the polls on election day to arrange for special gasoline. The OPA has ruled that gasoline will be available for such purposes.

"It is necessary in a democrary" Mr. Vincent said, "that people participate in elections by casting their ballots. Because of the rationing program and other wartime restrictions that have a normal tendency to keep people away from the polls, the Democratic committee in Kentucky is exerting every effort to assist the people by providing convenient transportation.

Wartime Lighting Suggestions

HOW TO GET MORE LIGHT FROM YOUR PRESENT EQUIPMENT

Use One Large Bulb Instead of Several Smaller Ones

Offhand it would seem that four 25-watt bulbs would produce the same amount of light as one 100-watt bulb. But such is not the case. A 100-watt bulb produces as much light as SIX 25-watt bulbs, yet uses one-third less current. Therefore, when practical, always use one large bulb instead of several smaller ones of same total wattage and you'll get more light for your money.

OTHER WAYS TO CONSERVE LIGHT

1. Remove and clean lamp bulbs and lamp bowls regularly. Dry thoroughly before using again.
2. Keep shade linings light. Clean or brush regularly. Repaint or reline dark-colored paper or parchment shades.
3. Sit close enough to the lamp to get all the help it can give your eyes.
4. Avoid direct glare from lamp bulbs by using shades deep enough and wide enough.
5. Arrange furniture so one lamp can serve two people. But be sure lamp is not too far away from either person.
6. Turn off lamps not in use. Lamp bulbs use critical materials... Make them last longer.

Electricity ...is vital to war production. Use all you need but don't waste it just because it's cheap and isn't rationed.

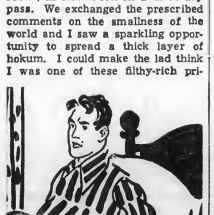
See Here, Private Hargrove!

by Marion Hargrove

W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: Private Marion Hargrove, former feature editor of a North Carolina newspaper, has been inducted into the army and is receiving his basic training at Fort Bragg. He has been classified as a cook and this coupled with his frequent assignment to KP have made him quite familiar with the Company kitchen. He has also learned a lot about the finer points of "goldbricking" and of other favorite soldier pastimes. He has learned all of the popular army slang expressions. He has become well acquainted with a number of other rookies—as the first training period draws toward its close this gang starts to break up. Hargrove himself is just starting his first ten-day furlough.

CHAPTER XI



It's enough to drive a man to drink. You get a ten-day furlough and head for New York. You munch a due bill on an ultra-swank hotel. You say to yourself that for those ten days you will be an all-out civilian, you will squander your substance in rioutous living, you will forget altogether the fact that you are a soldier. And then what happens?

You wake up at six o'clock, no matter how late you stay out the night before. Then you can't go back to sleep. You have to buy enormous quantities of civilian food to keep up with your Army appetite. You look in shop windows and see books you'd give your wisdom teeth for, but you think of your purse in terms of $36 a month and the inner man convinces you that you can't afford them.

You'd like very much to put on your civilian clothes, just for a change, but your friends think you look so pretty in your uniform that they won't let you pull the old blue serge out of mothballs.

It isn't bad all the way through, though.

For instance, I walked out of the hotel the other day and ran into one of the boys from my own barracks, in New York on a three-day pass. We exchanged the prescribed comments on the smallness of the world and I saw a sparkling opportunity to spread a thick layer of hokum. I could make the lad think I was one of these filthy-rich privates you so often read about in the papers.

The kind that go about flashing $1,000 bills before unsuspecting headwaiters.

"Won't you have lunch with me?" I asked. Then I added, quite casually, "I'm stopping here at the Astor."

His eyes popped faintly, but a good soldier never passes up a free meal. We went back into the hotel and into the terrifyingly smart dining room. I smiled condescendingly at the headwaiter, to make him think I was a cash customer at the hotel, and he led us to a table.

"I'm afraid you'll find the food here depressingly 'dull,' I told my comrade-in-arms. "No ortolans or hummingbird tongues. They seem to go in for plain but wholesome foods. Won't you try the breast of guinea hen, with a sip of Onion Soup Reine?"

"I don't care if I do," he said. "I ain't particularly particular about what I eat."

"My nerves are all shot," I remarked airily. "New York tires me dreadfully. I have to run about nolens volens—that's Latin for willynilly—from one night club to another, brushing up on old friendships. And I'm getting so tired of shows and cocktail parties! Won't you have a slug of hootch with me? I've got to have one."

He gulped nervously and replied that he didn't care if he did. I noticed with satisfaction that he was taking in all the propaganda about night clubs, shows, and cocktail parties.

"I'm a man of simple tastes myself," I said, lifting both eyebrows to give my face that bored expression. "I can't stand these silly mixed drinks. I like my liquor straight. I'm partial to Scotch."

"I'm a rye man myself," he said. The waiter, who had been standing by with a growingly disgusted face, shrugged his shoulders and fetched two tiny flagons of the Old Enemy.

His face sank a little at the sight, but I managed to keep up a sophisticated front. I took a sip of soda and lifted the glass. "Well, here's looking at you and going down me."

"Corn on the corn," he said, wincing at the toast. I downed the yellow poison and so did he. I bungled the job, though, and had to use two gulps. Oooohl I shuddered violently, but he didn't see. He had turned his face and was coughing with real fervor.

We managed to get through the meal all right, weakened though we were by the firewater. I continued to impress him. The only obstacle I hit was his reminder that I would be spending Thanksgiving on kitchen police.

We parted when I told him I couldn't get out of a reception I had to attend at 2:30. I had sufficiently impressed him and, with the aid of Providence, I might be able to borrow money from him occasionally back at Fort Bragg.

The meal cost me nothing, but the fifty-cent tip was staggering. If worst should come to worst, I could always hock my watch. If I had a watch.

Thanksgiving Day—with all its roast Vermont turkey, its pies and fruits, its candies, and free cigarettes—was just another day to me. Phooey to it.

Our mess sergeant, one Orville D. Pope, was disgustingly cheerful when he awoke me in the morning.

"Please go away," I said. "Just go away and let me gently curse."

"Oh, Private Hargrove," he crowed, "we have so much to be thankful for. So very, very much! We have food, and warmth, and freedom!"

"Food, we've got," I growled. "Including potatoes, with peelings to peel. This is my 678th potato this morning. I don't need coal for warmth when I'm bathing myself in sweat. And freedom? See, I am laughing bitterly! It is Thanksgiving Day and I am peeling potatoes and washing dishes for the orgy. Phooey to Thanksgiving!"

Sollie Buchman, the cook, who was a student with me in Battery A, strode up humming that msudlin old grammar-school song about "over the river and through the woods, to grandfather's house we go."

"It is a glorious day," drooled Private Buchman. "It does my old heart good to think of the expression on those boys' faces when they see that Thanksgiving dinner."

"Repress yourself, Pappy," I asked him. "It is not to think of the dinner. I am thinking of the sinks overflowing with dirty dishes left by those gluttonous hogs. It was not enough that we had trays to wash. Now we have to have improvements. Now we have to have china plates. And cups. And soup bowls. And silverware. I hate progress!"

"Better leave the lad alone, Pappy," sighed Sergeant Pope. "He is pouting and wil not enter into the spirit of the day. He has done wrong and is paying for it now."

Private Buchman and the mess sergeant busied themselves at the ovens. I sat there ferociously jabbing at potatoes and muttering wildly. Three times I scowled at the sergeant, but he wasn't looking.

Maury Sher, my bosom companion from the cooks' battery, came racing in through the back door. Maury was slated to be transferred to a cook's job at Madison Barracks, New York, and would be leaving the following day.

"If you have come to extend the season's greetings, comrade," I told him wearily, "kindly do not trouble yourself. To paraphrase Dickens, any fool who goes about with 'Happy Thanksgiving' on his lips should be boiled in his own slumgullion and buried with a GI breadstick in his heart. Do not attempt to cheer me."

"I'm not going to Madison Barracks," he shouted. "I'm staying here. Right here in the Replacement Center! I'm going to be a mess sergeant in the antitank battery. A mess sergeant!"

I was dawdling over a huge chocolate nut sundae the other night at the Service Club cafeteria when Johnny Lisk walked in with someone who was a dead ringer for Simmons Jones of the Charlotte News staff. Anyone who is a dead ringer for Simmons Jones can't be anybody but Simmons Jones, I decided, so I gave the low whistle. The two saw me and came over.

It was Simmons, all right. He looked as if the two things he needed most at the moment were a haircut and a kind word of sympathy. He had the look of utter futility known only to those who have been in the Army for less than ten days.

"Well, boy," I asked him, "how do you like the Army? And you don't need to lie about it."

"I don't think I'll ever get used to it," he said. "I've been pushed and crowded and yelled at for a week now, and it doesn't get any better. Maybe I was just born to be a civilian."

"You should have seen Johnny and me when we got in," I told him. "That's been only four months ago, and here we are being condescending and fatherly already. Them were the days, weren't they, Johnny?"

Lisk sighed deeply. "Simmons don't know the trouble at all," he said. "When Hargrove and I had been in three or four days, they slapped us on KP and almost killed us first thing. Then, the next day, they put the two of us to cleaning and painting GI cans until past supper time."

Simmons knocked on wood. "Well, they must have forgotten me. I've been in the Army a week already and I haven't been on KP yet."

"You will, brother," said Johnny. "You will."

"Hargrove," said Simmons, "will you please stop looking at my hair? I can't go ten feet without being reminded to get a haircut. As soon as I can find a minute, I'll get it cut."

"Are you really having a hard time of it?" I asked him.

"Well, after that talk I got from you before I was inducted, I thought I would be going through hell for the first three weeks. The way you talked was terrifying, to say the least. So I prepared myself for a much rougher time than I'm really getting.

"The drilling isn't bad at all. I suppose my dancing has helped me there. Anyway, I even surprise myself at it.

"But the getting up and dressing in ten minutes! I'll never be able to do it. Everything is all right until it comes to the leggins. I struggle with those things until I'm limp, and I never do get them on in time. Yesterday I just tied them on for reveille and sneaked back and "I can't go ten feet without being reminded to get a haircut," he said.

put them on properly later. I've tried every way possible, but I just can't get anywhere with them."

"How are the fellows?" I asked him. "Nice bunch of boys?"

"I was surprised at them," he said. "People I've never seen before, and they all go out of their way to help each other. When we were first inducted, there were a lot of fellows I'd seen possibly once or twice before in my life and we all acted as if we'd known each other since we were babies."

"Then, too. I've already run across some of the boys I knew. Johnny here is attached to our battery for rations and quarters, and so is Buster Charnley. They do as much as they can to show me the ropes and help me along during this awkward period."

Reading through the camp newspaper the other day, I noticed stories written by Pvt. T. Mulvehill, Private Thos. Mulvehille, Pfc. Tom Mulvehill, Thomas Mulvehill (pfc.) and various other authors whose names bore startling resemblance to Thomas Mulvehill, Pvt. or Pfc.

The collection of literary and journalistic contributions to the Fort Bragg Post were all marked by the same flair for rhetoric, the true gift of gab, and a certain rich and gorgeous sentimentality. In the midst of a factual story about a group of college girl choristers coming to Fort Bragg for a concert, the steady journalistic strain would suddenly burst into brilliant and majestic phrases such as "The Blankth Battalion recreation hall will burst into golden sound next Tuesday night when the angelic voices of thirty lovely Zilch College young ladies present a recital . . ." or "the General's little eight-year-old son, awed by the solemnity of the occasion, clung to his daddy's hand throughout the impressive ceremonies."

This is what is known as the Mulvehill Touch.

The Mulvehill Touch is supplied at Fort Bragg by the Public Relations Office's irrepressible and inimitable whirling dervish, Black Tom Mulvehill, a fantastic and unbelievable Irish tyro, who came from New York City by way of Salt Lake City, Utah. Mulvehill of the great head and the shaggy locks, Mulvehill of the lumbering walk, the man of a thousand faces and a thousand voices—Mulvehill is the Public Relations Office's one spark of true glamour, our hope of immortality.

Mulvehill is everywhere at all times. Out of every hundred photographs taken at Fort Bragg—official or personal, professional or amateur—it is safe to say that the flexible face of Private Mulvehill will beam out at you from ninety-five of them. Photographers have no idea of how he gets into the pictures, but a picture of any "Rec" hall in the Center will show Mulvehill playing ping-pong. (He's the one nearest the camera.)

Mulvehill's next greatest talent is his ability to create wildness and confusion at will. His desk drawers bulge and spill great quantities of unrelated papers, old notes, newspaper clippings, and weird personal effects. His working schedule and methods are chaotic and unfathomable. He can write six stories at once, using every needed typewriter in the building.

PYORRHOEA

A few years ago the reading public was told that inflammation of the gums (gingivitis) was a forerunner of pyorrhoea and that once pyorrhoea occurred, all the teeth should be removed.

Dr. Barton

Fortunately our dentists immediately warned their patients that gum inflammation was a sign of some disturbance of the body but it did not mean that pyorrhoea was bound to follow gingivitis. Also that both gingivitis and pyorrhoea could be cured or corrected by proper treatment. Gingivitis is an inflammation of the soft tissues around the teeth; it may be caused by some general disturbance in the body.

In the Journal of the American Dental Association, Dr. Willa Yeretsky, Grand Rapids, Mich., states that many teeth need never have been lost at all; they were sacrificed because it was thought that inflamed gums caused pyorrhoea—pus in the gums.

Dr. Yeretsky outlines the causes of gingivitis—poor-fitting plates, impaction of food at certain places because of faulty contact points between upper and lower teeth, formation of calculus which is deposited from the saliva, the digestive juice of the mouth. As calculus is the chief "local" cause of gingivitis and cannot be deposited on the teeth if the number of organisms in the mouth is kept low, it can be seen how necessary it is to keep the mouth as clean as possible.

Dr. Yeretsky points out that it is eating the wrong foods that causes the saliva to deposit calculus and set up inflammation of the gums. The gums themselves are not receiving the right kind of nourishment to prevent gingivitis.

The diet outlined to keep the gums in a healthy condition is: Daily, one-half pint of orange or tomato or grapefruit juice. Twice daily, protein in the form of meat, eggs, fish or cheese. Four or five eggs, at least, should be eaten every week. One portion of the following vegetables: lettuce, cabbage, watercress, swiss chard, brussels sprouts, turnip greens, cauliflower, kale, broccoli, beet greens.

Once daily, one or more of the following vegetables: carrots, beets, peas, corn, pumpkin, onions, cucumber, squash, turnips, artichokes, asparagus.

Carbohydrates, one at each meal to fill balance of diet: bread, potato, noodles, macaroni, cereals, with fortified bread, or whole grain cereal at two of the meals.

One pint of milk every day; may be in form of cottage cheese, cream soup, or custard.

Low Par Invites Vincent's Angina

When an organism is found in every case of a certain disease, it is reasonable to assume it to be the cause of the disease. Thus in Vincent's angina—ulceration of the throat and mouth with sometimes a light gray membrane present—two organisms are always found—fusiform bacillus and Vincent's spirillum. These organisms or their poisons cause Vincent's angina.

The causes are local or general. Local cause is lack of rinsing out the mouth and cleaning the teeth. Lime deposits occur under the margin of the gums between the teeth together with particles of soft food; the tartar and food particles rob the gums of the power to resist the organisms which multiply very rapidly. The gums swell and collect more poisons and also interfere with the proper circulation of the blood in the gums. If pure rich blood is prevented from nourishing the gums, the tissues lack sufficient power to fight the organisms.

Another local cause is faulty restoration of teeth by the dentist. The systematic or general causes of Vincent's angina are (1) lack of vitamins B and C, and (2) lack of certain gland substances.

From the above information given us by Dr. Schluger, we learn that if we brush our teeth and gums regularly—keep the mouth clean—and yet we have attacks of Vincent's angina then we should look further for the cause.

"General physical disability, whether due to fatigue, lack of sunshine and exercise, following a surgical operation or long illness, can be the underlying cause."

QUESTION BOX

Q.—What causes large bruises on the arms and legs? These appear almost instantly if I knock myself, and sometimes they appear without reason.

A.—These spots are often due to gland changes as we grow older.

Q.—Could a milk gland enlargement in a woman 70 years old cause a lump on the breast?

A.—A milk gland that is causing no pain needs no attention.

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:8-11; Isaiah 58:13, 14; Mark 2:23-3:6.

GOLDEN TEXT—And he said unto them, the sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath.—Mark 2:27.

The sabbath was essentially a day of rest and worship; hence the principles which surrounded it and directed its life may be applied to our day of rest, which is the first day of the week—the Lord's day.

That word "rest" sounds a little strange in this busy world of ours, and yet it is an important one. It means quiet for the struggling one, calm for the troubled, repose for the weary, tranquility for the disturbed, cessation of labor for the worn-out one.

God in His infinite wisdom saw that without rest man would soon destroy himself, and He made provision for one day in seven when labor should cease and man should be free for that recreation of soul and body which should fit him for the labor of the week.

Our lesson answers two important questions about our rest day, nsmely, Why ? and How?

I. Why We Keep a Day of Rest (Exod. 20:8-11; Isa. 58:13, 14).

The chief reason is that God commands it. One day out of seven is for our re-creation by rest and worship. That should be sufficient to cause His people to "remember" the day "to keep it holy."

Doubtless it is true that essential war work and related activities must be carried on, even on Sunday. God did not forbid works of necessity. But even though there is this need, who will deny that many use Sunday for work that is not essential—and countless others devote it to godless pleasure.

Notice that the day of rest was to be not only for the family, but also for servants and for visitors. The employer who unnecessarily operates his factory or office on Sunday violates this commandment. Note also that the man who is to rest on the seventh day is supposed to work on the six days.

The precept of Exodus 20 is enforced by the promise of Isaiah 58. The man who delights in keeping God's commandment regarding the day of rest, will find that God delights in and honors him. Both men and nations have found this to be true.

II. How We Keep a Day of Rest (Mark 2:23-3:6).

The formalists of Christ's day, the Pharisees, had overlooked the heart of God's law and the holy living which it was intended to produce, and had bound up even the observance of the sabbath (which was intended to be a day of rest and gladness) in such a mass of technical "thou shalt nots" that it was a day of fear. They had a false outward profession of worship and had entirely missed the true spirituality of God's law, a fact which drew upon their heads the sneer and rebuke of our Lord.

The two incidents in this portion of our lesson reveal that under the cloak of earnestly observing the law of the sabbath, the Pharisees were actually covering their own hypocrisy and their hatred for Christ.

The accusations against the disciples because they had taken and eaten grain was not on the ground that they had stolen, for the law (Deut. 23:25) guaranteed that right to the one who passed through his neighbor's field. The Pharisees contended, however, that the disciples had worked on the sabbath in picking and hulling the grain.

The healing of the man with the withered arm revealed that back of their professed concern for the sabbath was a real hatred for Christ. It is an appalling thing that in the house of worship on the very sabbath day, these men, outwardly so religious, were plotting against our Lord.

"They watched him," and even so the enemies of the Cross watch us who are His followers. They are not concerned that the man with the withered arm, or with the withered soul may be helped, but only that they may find something to condemn.

Jesus cuts across human hypocrisy and hatred to declare that the true keeping of the sabbath is to do the work of God. No work of necessity (like plucking the grain) or of mercy (like healing the withered arm) is ever out of place on the day of rest.

A word of caution is needed, for some have sought to interpret this Scripture as providing biblical ground for doing all sorts of things on their day of rest. That day is for man's good, not for his destruction. His greatest good is served by rest, worship, spiritual development, Christian fellowship, and the doing of deeds of necessity and mercy.

The desecration of the Lord's Day in our time is a serious matter. Let us not contribute to its deterioration. America needs Sunday as a day of rest and worship.

If not, dirt on the bottom of the iron may be causing the condition, in which case rub the bottom of the iron with a damp cloth. When cool, polish with a dry cloth. In very stubborn cases, use silver polish or run the iron over table salt, spread on waxed paper to smooth the sole plate.

One thing a soldier is afraid of is a display of emotion. That's why his slang so often sounds derogatory. For example, he refers to the silver eagles on his colonel's shoulder straps as "buzzards." But when he speaks of his favorite cigarette, he says: "Camels." They're first with men in the Army as well as with Sailors, Marines, and Coast Guardsmen. (According to actual sales records in service men's stores.) And though there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. S., and to men in the Navy, Marines, and Coast Guard wherever they are.—Adv.

TURKEYS AND THE ARMY

The army is beginning to wonder if it hasn't over-extended itself on the business of turkeys. It has ruled that civilians may not buy turkeys for their Thanksgiving or Christmas dinners—or for next Sunday's dinner, for that matter—until the army has acquired 12 million pounds for the armed forces overseas.

That sounded all right, until somebody in the quartermaster corps began figuring out what you could do with 12 million pounds of turkeys. For generous portions, you can figure that 100 pounds of undressed turkey will feed 100 men.

The number of men in the armed forces overseas, including army, navy, and marines, is around two million. Allow each man a pound of turkey for Thanksgiving and another for Christmas, and you reach the total of four million pounds.

But the amount reserved for this purpose is three times four million, or 12 million pounds.

When certain food experts in the quartermaster corps realized this, they started to do some fast telephoning. When last heard from, they still didn't know what two million men would do with 12 million pounds of turkey—except eat 'em.

NAZI PSYCHOLOGICAL WARFARE

Beware of false rumors about Germany. The Germans, masters of psychological warfare, are watching every opportunity to take advantage of American credulity. They know that Americans are optimistic by nature and that we are prone to believe any story about miraculous victories or fortunate events.

Apparently it was this method of psychological warfare which prompted the reports that Hitler had been deposed in favor of military authorities.

It has now been definitely established that no such event took place. State department officials now say flatly that the whole thing was a false report, from beginning to end. It was so generally reported, however, that they believe it must have been prompted by Germany. The motive in such a case would have been to make Americans rush to the conclusion that Germany was tottering and the war was not far from finished. This would have the effect of weakening our bond drives and similar efforts.

Note: The Nazi news report of Hitler's ousting came via Spain.

ARMY'S FAVORITE FOODS

Since the Truman committee's investigation of food waste in the army, the quartermaster corps has been as frugal as a Dutch housewife. Elaborate studies have been made of what the soldiers eat and what they leave on the plate, with the idea of cutting down the percentage of garbage.

After watching the eating habits of 16,000 soldiers at Chanute Field, Ill., the quartermaster corps gave each dish a rating, according to its popularity.

Roast chicken and apple pie rated 100. So did roast duck and roast ham. But creamed ham rated only 55. (QMC dietician Mary I. Barber explains: "Not many men like messed up food. Artemus Ward said: 'When I eat hash, I like to know what I'm eating.'")

No matter what you may do to butter up spinach, it remains spinach and the soldiers gave it a rating of 41. It was just about the lowest of all.

NO TIRES FOR RUBBER CZAR

Col. Bradley Dewey, who succeeded Big Bill Jeffers as rubber director, says he wishes he could get his hands on a set of synthetic tires. He is now in charge of the program which promises to produce 30 million synthetic tires by the end of next year, but he is not able to try synthetic tires on his own car.

"I wish," says Colonel Dewey, "that OPA would let me have a set of the new tires. I'd like to try them out. I understand they skid less than natural rubber. Not that I drive at skidding speeds, mind you, but I'd like to see what they would do.

"Some of the taxi drivers out in Akron have new synthetic tires, and they swear by them. But I'd like to see what they would do for me."

Reason for Dewey's inability to get tires is that though he is in charge of the entire program, he is obliged to apply for tires through OPA, like any other citizen. And since his present tires are reasonably good, he can't get any new synthetic tires.

(See Recipes Below.)

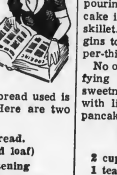
Breakfast Needs

How many notches are you pushing up the nutrition yardstick at breakfast time? There are three meals a day, and if your family is to receive the necessary amount of nutriment during that day you should take care of as many of these requirements at one meal as possible.

Another reason in favor of the nutritious breakfast is that it helps the family to be up and at the day's work with more zip and pep than if they just have the roll and coffee, bite-and-run excuse for breakfast.

Always have fruit or fruit juice to begin the day. Not only does it help to start the day off in good style, but it gives you some quota of your vitamins and minerals and calcium.

Eggs in one form or another have always been a breakfast favorite. Serving them during this morning meal is a splendid way of getting in at least the one egg a day or four or five a week requirement in hand. However, if you feel that eggs are too expensive to serve every day for breakfast, use fruits that contain iron, such as prunes and oatmeal and whole grain breads to make up on the vitamin B1 needs.



It's smart to introduce variety into the breakfast just as is done in the other meals. Vary breakfast breads as much as possible, the ways in which you fix eggs, the fruits served, and the cereals or other foods such as pancakes, waffles, french toast, etc.

Here's a waffle recipe guaranteed to please palates and ask for encores:

Walnut Waffles.
(Makes 4 to 6 large waffles)

2 well-beaten egg yolks
1½ cups milk
2 cups pastry flour
¼ teaspoon salt
4 teaspoons baking powder
6 tablespoons melted shortening or oil
2 stiffly beaten egg whites
1 cup broken walnut kernels

Combine beaten egg yolks and milk. Add flour sifted with salt and baking powder. Then add melted shortening or oil. Beat until smooth, then fold in egg whites and nuts. Bake in ungreased waffle iron.

Toast is an old standby and even more delightful if the bread used is varied occasionally. Here are two new favorites:

Raisin Nut Bread.
(Makes 1 1-pound loaf)

2 tablespoons shortening
4 tablespoons brown sugar
1 egg
2 cups sifted flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon cinnamon

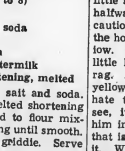
Date Bread.
(Makes 1 1-pound loaf)

2½ cups sifted flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup sugar
1¼ cups chopped dates
2 eggs
1¼ cups milk
4 tablespoons melted shortening



Sift together flour, baking powder, salt and sugar. Add dates. Beat eggs, milk and shortening and add to dry ingredients. Stir only until flour is well moistened. Pour into greased loaf pan. Bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) for 1 hour.

A delicate treat for breakfast is the lacy, golden morsel corn cake which originated down south. It should be served with butter or margarine and honey:

Lacy Corn Cakes.
(Serves 6 to 8)

1¼ cups white water ground cornmeal
1 teaspoon salt
2 eggs, well beaten
2 cups milk
¼ cup shortening, melted

Add salt to cornmeal. Combine well beaten eggs, milk, melted shortening and pour into cornmeal, stirring until well combined. Pour batter, which should be very thin, into a pitcher and stir thoroughly before pouring each pancake into a well greased griddle or skillet. Turn the pancake as it begins to brown. They should be paper-thin and have a lacy effect.

No one could ask for a more satisfying breakfast than the luscious sweetness of maple syrup combined with light, fluffy tender buttermilk pancakes:

Buttermilk Pancakes.
(Serves 6 to 8)

2 cups sifted flour
1 teaspoon baking soda
1 teaspoon salt
2 eggs, well beaten
2 cups (scant) buttermilk
2 tablespoons shortening, melted

Sift together flour, salt and soda. Mix beaten eggs, melted shortening and buttermilk. Add to flour mixture gradually, beating until smooth. Fry in hot, greased griddle. Serve with maple syrup.

Cereal Tricks

Keep your breakfasts interesting by using plenty of unrationed cereals in different, delicious ways. For example, you can add a little melted shortening to cereal flakes, form a nest in a muffin pan, drop an egg into it, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and bake in a slow (325° F.) oven until firm. If the family tires of one cereal, make a cereal medley of several different prepared, ready-to-eat cereals and serve with fruit or berries, sugar and cream.

Top of the Morning! A recent survey of students' breakfast habits revealed the following facts. About 50,000 students were contacted.

Most students do eat breakfast, but there are still some who go without it. Over half of them have rolls or bread of some kind, but more than half do not have breakfast food of any kind.

The larger percentage did not have fruit or milk—a must item for students' breakfasts.

About a fifth of the amount interviewed do not have meat or eggs for breakfast.

According to their own opinion, most of them feel they do not have an adequate breakfast.

CHATTERER IS PUT IN PRISON

Whoever does a deed that's wrong
Will surely find someday
That for that naughty act of his
He'll surely have to pay.

THAT was the way with Chatterer the Red Squirrel. Of course, he had no business to steal corn from Farmer Brown's corncrib. To be sure, he felt that he had just as much right to that corn as Farmer Brown had. You see, the little people of the Green Meadows and the Green Forest feel that everything that grows belongs to them if they want it and are smart enough to get it before someone else does. But it is just there that Chatterer went wrong. Farmer Brown had harvested that corn and stored it in his corncrib, and so, of course, no one else had any right to it. Right down deep in his heart Chatterer knew this.

Chatterer was very miserable, so miserable and frightened that he could do nothing but sit huddled up in a little shivery ball. He hadn't the least doubt in the world that this was his very last day and that Farmer Brown's Boy would turn him over to cruel Black Pussy for her breakfast. Farmer Brown's Boy had left him in the trap in the house and had gone out. For a long time Chatterer could hear pounding out in the woodshed, and Farmer Brown's Boy whistling as he pounded. After what seemed a very long time, ages and ages, Farmer Brown's Boy came back. He had with him a queer-looking box.

"There," said he, "is a new home for you, you little red imp! I guess

He struggled and did his best to bite.

it will keep you out of trouble."

He slid back a little door in the top of the box. Then he put on a stout glove and opening a little door in the trap he put in his big hand and closed it around Chatterer. Poor little Chatterer! He was sure now that this was the end and that he was to be given to Black Pussy, who was looking on with hungry yellow eyes. He struggled and did his best to bite, but the thick glove gave his sharp little teeth no chance to hurt the hand that held him. Even in his terror he noticed that the big hand tried to be gentle and squeezed him no tighter than was necessary. Then he was lifted out of the trap and dropped through the little doorway in the top of the queer box, and the door was fastened. Nothing terrible had happened, after all.

Farmer Brown's Boy took the box out into the shed and put it where the sun shone into it. For a little while he stayed watching, but Chatterer still sulked and sulked. By and by he went away, taking Black Pussy with him, and Chatterer was alone.

When he was quite sure that no one was about, Chatterer began to wonder what sort of a place he was in and if there wasn't some way to get out. He found that one side and the top were of fine stout wire through which he could look out, and that the other sides and the bottom were of wood covered with wire, so that there was no chance for his sharp teeth to gnaw a way out. In one corner was a stout piece of an appletree, with two little stubby branches to sit on, and halfway up a little round hole. Very cautiously Chatterer peeped inside the hole. Inside was a splendid hollow. On the floor of the box was a little heap of shavings and bits of rag. And there was a little pile of yellow corn. How Chatterer did hate the sight of that corn! You see, it was corn that had gotten him into all this trouble. At least, that is the way Chatterer felt about it. When he had examined everything, he knew that there was no way out. Chatterer was in a prison, though that is not what Farmer Brown's Boy called it. He said it was a cage.

Annual Meeting Held October 5th By Homemakers.

stated that homemakers are making excellant plans on paper for tree and flower plantings after the war. Women on the Home Front are not able to give their lawns as much as previously.

Mrs. A. L. Pfalsgraf, Bullittsville, presented a clipping booklet of county publicity to Mrs Gaines. 133 articles were written by homemakers during the year.

Homemakers are caring for their home equipment more than ever according to Mrs. Earl Morehead, Taylorsport, Mrs. Morehead told about buying the parts and repairing her washing machine.

"The Homemaker has a great responsibility in feeding her family nutritious meals during this period of rush and points," said Mrs. Joe Berkshire, Nutrition Chairman.

The 4-H report was given by Mrs. George Morith, Florence. She stated that there were 289 club girls in ten clubs enrolled in canning, foods and clothing. She presented Bernice Cebree of Florence, Corinne Walton, Burlington, and Nina Joyce and Norma Jean Easton of Verona, who wore their costumes they had made in club work.

H. R. Forkner, County Agent, commended the Homemakers for their part in the program to increase the farm food supply. He reported that sixty families had grown table soy beans for the first time this year.

"Conserve for Victory" will be the subject studied by Homemakers 1943-44, according to Mary Hood Gillaspie, Home Demonstration Agent.

A leter of greeting was read from Mrs. Mary Scott Moore, former Home Demonsration Agent.

The report of the nominating committee was given by Mrs. Vernon Pope. The following ticket was unaminously voted to serve for the following year; Mrs. Leo Flynn, Walton, President; Mrs. Courtney Kelly, Burlington, Vice President; and Mrs. Albert Willis, Bullittsville, Secretary and Treasure.

A plate lunch was served by the women of the Florence Methodist Church.

The afternoon program was opened with a concert presented by the Boone County School Band, under the direction of Mr. Dean Bloss. All were thrilled by the band. Mrs. Walter Scott Worthington played two selections on the violin.

WAR FUND PRAYER

Our Heavenly Father, we have accepted the liberty for which our fathers fought and suffered. Help us to accept the responsibility of preserving our freedom. Help us to accept the challenge of this hour, of world wide conflict. Help us to know that we have a job to do, a place to fill if we are to continue as a free people.

Let us count the high privilege to sacrifice and to share our money with the boys who daily risk their lives for our protection . . . for the seamen who man our ships . . . for the care of homless refugees who need the bare necessities of life.

Help us to remember that in giving to the War Fund, we obey the will of Him who said," I was in prison and ye visited me. I was enhungered and ye gave me meat. I was sick and ye ministered unto me". Grant us wisdom and courage and the power to help our own and our fighting allies in the fight to set men free.

SOIL CONSERVATION NEWS

Pond digging is in full sway at the present time, says J. C. Acree, Asst. Soil Conservationist, for Boone County. Three different companies are now working in the County and a fourth is expected to start soon. The Soil Conservation Service will assist in selecting pond sites for farmers.

In selecting a pond or reservoir site, several things should be considered; 1st Ample drainage or feeding area; 2nd Type of soil; 3rd Location as to conveniences; 4th Free from sewage or barnyard manure, etc.

In building the pond or reservior, again we must be careful all washed in top soil must be removed down to good clay and then filled in with clay. This is called the core. Also a good spillway must be made to take care of excess water. Then again if the pond is to be used for fish the banks should be fairly steep so the water will not be shallow. By all means build a deep pond rather than a large shallow one.

If you are interested in having a pond or reservoir dug you may get in touch with the Soil Conservation Service, County Agent Office or by contacting the Contractors themselves.

Rev. C. J. Alford, Local Baptist Pastor Resigns

Rev. C. J. Alford, pastor of First Baptist Church resigned Sunday, October 17th, after a fruitful ministry of seven years on this field.

He begins his pastorate at the Dehaven Memorial Baptist church, LaGrange, Ky., on November 1st.

Some of the accomplishments during his ministry here are: Redecoration of the church, purchase of new Hymnals and four pianos, establishment of a fully graded Baptist Training Union, a Library of approximately three-hundred and fifty books, a weekly church bulletin, a parsonage fund of $2,775.00 and there is a balance of $791.00 in the treasurery.

There have been above three hundred persons added to the church membership and each year a Daily Vacation Bible School of two weeks has been held.

Mrs. Alford has proven herself, efficient, capable and faithful in all phases of the church work.

The church feels deeply the loss of this fine couple, but as they are entering a larger field of service, we bid them Godspeed.

Brother Alford expressed himself thus in his resignation Sunday.

It is with a deep feeling of mingled emotions that I submit my resignation as pastor of this church to accept the pastorate of the DeHaven Memorial Church at LaGrange, beginning my ministry there November 1st.

I am thankful for the cooperation I have had and for the development I have seen in many lives. The ties that bind us together are strong and permanent. With many of you I have stood by the open grave and said the last rites over the form of your departed loved ones. With others, I have stood at the marriage altar and before God, joined you together as man and wife. Many of you have accepted Christ as your Saviour under my ministry, and it was my pleasure to bury you with Him in beautiful baptism. We have visited and prayer with the sick, and shared in the hospitality of your homes. Nothing but the will of God could take us from you, but His will is best for us all.

I, therefore surrender my ministry with a clear conviction that I have helped, and in the spirit of good-will toward every member of the church.

Open Season on Doves Extended to Oct. 27th.

Frankfort, Ky., Oct.—The open season for hunting mourning doves in Kentucky was lengthened today from 30 to 42 days, S. A. Wakefield, Director of the Division of Game and Fish, announced after receiving word from Washington of the change.

Interior Secretary Harold L. Ickes announced that President Roosevelt has signed an amendment to the migratory bird treaty act regulations, lengthening the season in 13 states, including Kentucky.

In Kentucky where the season opened September 16, hunting will continue until October 27 instead of closing on Friday, October 15.

Wakefield stated that the regulations for hunting doves would remain unchanged by the lengthened season.

County Dairymen Consider Serious Feed Problem

Dairymen this winter are facing the most serious feed problem in years according to the reports of twenty leading dairymen who attended the dairy feeding school at the Town Hall in Florence on last Friday. Feed prices have advanced to the point where the average dairyman who purchases both his pay and grain feeds can hardly expect a profit this winter.

Lynn Copeland, dairy specialist of the College of Agriculture advised dairymen to feed their cows well so that they would not deplete their bodies of important body minerals. Once the cows body has been depleted thru lack of feed her efficiency is lowered and considerable feed must be used to bring her back into profitable production. He urged that farmers immediately make the most efficient use of all available corn fodder thru early feeding, shredding or making of silage in order that sufficient roughages be available for the winter feeding program. The use of winter cover crop pastures were recommended as the cheapest source of protein and vitamines.

Copeland pointed out that the high producing cows always make the most efficient use of the grain feed. A Holstein cow full fed the best quality legume hay can produce from 15 to 18 pounds of milk and meet all her needed feed requirements. A Jersey can produce from 10 to 12 pounds of milk daily under the above conditions and meet her feed requirements. Cows producing above this amount should have one pound of grain feed for each 2½ to 3 lbs. of extra milk produced. This means the high producing cows should receive the grain feed that is available. Where farmers have poor producers and are short of feed they should cull the low producers and give the total supply of feed to the better cows.

The milk subsidy program starting with October 1st production proposes to pay dairymen 35 cents per hundred pounds on whole milk sales and 4 cents per pound on butterfat.

Plans were made to hold another meeting during the winter months to further study the dairy production problems.

Jon Frances, a Cincinnati business man made a short talk at the close of the meeting. He stated he had visited the meeting with the sole purpose of learning why rich farmers were complaining about their feed costs in relation to milk prices. He stated that he was of the opinion that every consumer would have a greater appreciation of the farmers problems if he had a true picture of the problems the dairyman was encountering.

Mrs. Theresa Wilson spent part of last week with her grandson, Mr. Lawrence Wilson and family.

See Here, Private Hargrove!

by Marion Hargrove

WNU SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: Private Marion Hargrove, a newspaper man before his induction into the army, has been receiving his basic training at Fort Bragg, N. C. He has gone through the "hardest" weeks of his army career and has been classified as a cook. In addition, he has spent a considerable share of his spare time on KP duty. He is familiar with the finer points of "goldbricking" and "shooting the breeze." He has mastered most of the army slang expressions and has rather completely adjusted himself to training camp routine. As we pick up the story Private Hargrove and some of his buddies are having supper and are about to hand the mess sergeant his share of the day's abuse.

CHAPTER XII

Orville D. Pope, Mess Sergeant of Headquarters Battery and master of all he surveys (so long as he stays in the kitchen), strolled past our table like a happy night-club owner inspecting his saloon.

Photographer Bushemi lifted a forkful of creamed potatoes to his mouth, made a sour face and inserted the potatoes as if they were seasoned with liniment. Don Bishop, the public relations reporter who sometimes shows a streak of sheer sanity, lifted his coffee, held his nose and drank it.

"Sergeant Pope," I said in a small voice, "earlier in the course of this supper I told you that I had never tasted anything harder or drier than the bread you served us tonight. I want to take that back, Pope. When I said that, I hadn't tasted your peanut butter."

"You're the only ones I ever hear griping about the chow in this battery," said Pope. "You're the only ones I ever have trouble with. You three and Mulvehill. If I'll pay for your food, won't you please take all your meals at the Service Club?"

"Let's leave Mulvehill's name out of this," I said. "Poor, poor, old Mulvehill. We knew him well. He was a good boy, was the Lieutho-mas."

"I noticed the place is so quiet tonight that you can even hear Bushemi eating his celery," said the sergeant. "Where is your dear friend Mulvehill, the bum?"

"You have run him over the hill," said Bishop. "Your food and your mess hall and your brutishly foul mouth have driven him away. He has deserted from the Army and his guilt is upon your hands."

"You know the one thing that's missing from this meal—the one thing that would make it perfect?" asked Bushemi.

"Ice cream?" asked the mess sergeant.

"Chloroform," said Bushemi.

Pope slapped his forehead mightily. "Why couldn't I have been a dud-picker, a horse valet, a suicide submarineman — anything but a mess sergeant? Where is Mulvehill?" He wrinkled his forehead. "Say! He wasn't here at breakfast either."

"Nor lunch," said Bishop. "Nor supper, nor lunch, nor breakfast yesterday."

"He has gone over the hill," I said, gloomily. "He has deserted."

"Let's see," said the sergeant. "He wasn't here all day today and he didn't come in yesterday and he didn't show up for supper the night before last. Is he sick?"

"He would have been," said Bishop, "if he hadn't got a decent meal soon."

"I can remember Mulvehill just like he was right here with us even now," I said. "He was a fine, noble, sensitive lad. He had a beautiful career before him in the Army. Fate can ruin any of us by tossing in the tiniest little monkey wrench—or the toughest little biscuit. I hated to see Mulvehill go over the hill."

"Cut the clowning," the sergeant wailed, convinced at last that Mulvehill had flown. "You can't make me think that he left because of my food. Where is he?"

"That," sighed Bishop, "is what the War Department would like to know."

Pope began drumming unconsciously on the table. "I know my food is as good as any in the Center. That ain't it. Did he take offense at something I said to him and start eating at the Service Club?"

Acton Dennington Hawkins the Third, chief cook, passed by. "Where's your friend Mulvehill?" he asked us.

"Oh," said Bushemi, forgetting the play, "Mulvehill's on furlough."

The mess sergeant rose with a roar. "The day shall come!" he screamed. "You'll all be on KP one of these days! Oh, will you suffer and will I enjoy myself! Finish your supper and get out of my mess hall! Get out! GET OUT!"

"As if I didn't have enough trouble on my hands with payday," said Top Sergeant Tate, "now I have to be exposed to the sight of you. Be brief."

"Sergeant," I began, "when I hear people say a soldier can't live on the pay he makes, I'd like to show them myself as a living proof that he can."

"Quit beating your gums," he said, "and get to the point. You didn't come in here to compliment the Army on its pay. And take your cap off when you're in the orderly room."

"I didn't come to compliment nobody nor nothing," I said, laying my cap on the corner of his desk. "I just came in to see if the War Department is mad at me. They haven't given me a cent of salary since the first of October."

"What in the sweet name of heaven are you talking about?" the top kick hooted, handing me back the cap. "We've had two regular paydays, including the one today. And we've had two supplementary payrolls for people who missed the regular paydays."

"Mind you," I put in, "I'm not complaining. I eat regularly and I have a roof over my head. I can get haircuts and movie tickets and cigarettes and shoe polish on credit, but I certainly would like a little cash spending money from time to time."

"Well," he groaned, slapping his desk wearily, "here we go again, Hargrove, the boy who makes a top kick's life exciting! Hargrove the hopeless—the sloppy bunk on inspection day, the soap in the soup, the thorn in the side. Hargrove, the boy who can take the simplest problem and reduce it to its most confusing form. Now let's start at the beginning and take the whole thing slowly. You haven't been paid since October first. How come?"

"That was because when the November first payday came around, I had just got here. I signed the October payroll in my old battery."

"All right," he said patiently, counting off a finger. "That's one payday. That brings us up to November tenth, the day of the supplementary payroll, when you should have got the pay you missed on the first. Did you sign the supplementary payroll for that occasion?"

"Yes, sir," I insisted. "Then when the supplementary payday came around, something happened. Or to be more correct, nothing happened. I still didn't get paid."

"That's two paydays you missed," the sergeant sighed. "I will check into the second later. Now—what about today's pay?"

"I missed out on that one too. The battery commander couldn't find my signature on the payroll."

He patted me on both shoulders, a little heavily, and I cowered. "Wait just a minute, Private Hargrove," he said sweetly. "Let sargie-wargie see what he can find out about the nasty old payroll."

He returned in a few minutes, frowning wearily. "Private Hargrove," he sighed, "dear Private Hargrove! You didn't draw your pay on the tenth of November because you weren't here on the tenth! You were on furlough! And you didn't sign the payroll for today because you were on furlough while it was being signed. Your modest pay for October has been in the battery safe for three weeks, just waiting for you to get around to picking it up."

"Wait just a minute, Private Hargrove," he said sweetly, "Let sargie-wargie see what he can find out about our nasty payroll."

He took a small envelope from behind his back. "Twenty-one dollars for services rendered through the month of October. Harrumph! Minus two-forty for theater tickets, minus a dollar for haircuts, minus seven dollars for canteen checks. Private Hargrove, I present to you your October wages—ten dollars and sixty cents!"

I took the money, looked at it tenderly, and crammed it into my pocket.

Winter, at last, is upon us, in the rear ranks, the surest indication is to be found in reveille.

All through the late summer and the fall, we hopped out of bed as soon as the whistle blew. Now we crawl grumblingly out when the sergeant puts the whistle to his lips for a "fall-out!" blast. Since it is still dark when we stand reveille, and since we are aided occasionally by a heaven-sent fog, there are many saviors of democracy who slip on merely a pair of shoes (partially laced), a pair of trousers, and a field jacket. The field jacket, when buttoned all the way to the collar, hides the absence of shirt and tie —and the sergeant is none the wiser.

In Headquarters Battery, the process of getting up in the morning has sunk into a rut of repetition. It's the same procedure every morning.

Sergeant Roughton, platoon leader, toots his brass at six o'clock and a few energetic soldiers at the other end of the squadroom rise and begin the morning with sickeningly cheerful horseplay. They yank the covers off their neighbors. The neighbors yank the covers back on.

Private First Class Bishop, unofficial guardian of the public relations staff, rises from his bunk which is next to mine. "Hargrove! Bushemi! Get up! Salute the morn!" Then he yells down the length of the squadroom to the bed of Private First Class Thomas ("Thoss") Mulvehill.

Mulvehill, every morning, has already been forcibly ejected from his bed by his wild neighbors. He is, by this time, sitting on the edge of his bunk, with his great head sunk between his knees and his fingers fumbling with his shoelaces. In a thick and fiery Irish brogue, he is berating whatever forces of destiny put him in this mad corner of the squadroom.

I stick a cautious toe out from under the covers. The outer air isn't cold but, then again, it isn't warm. I roll over and look at the next

"Git out of there or I'll dump you out."

bunk, where Private Bushemi is snoring gently. I roll back, get comfortable, and pull the cover over my head.

"Hargrove!" roars Bishop. "Get your lazy bones out of bed! It's five after six!"

"Call me at ten after six," I mutter. "Better still just sing out when my name is called at reveille."

Private Bishop reaches over suddenly and rips the blankets from the bunk. I rise, cursing him soundly. Private Bushemi is still sleeping, with a sweet and childish smile on his face. I lift a foot and give him a firm shove in the posterior.

"Git out of there, you blankerty-blanked dash-dash, shitless, good-for-nothing bum!" I shout, giving him two or three more shoves. "Git out of there or I'll dump you out!"

I reach over and grab the edge of Bushemi's bunk. I joggle it slightly to give the impression that I am just about to overturn the bunk. Bushemi bounces out of bed, swinging wildly. "You're going to get funny just one morning too often, and I'm going to beat the eternal perdition out of both of you. It's getting to the point where it ain't funny." Then he begins mumbling aimlessly under his breath as he steps into his trousers.

Somehow, we manage to get into the second shoe just as the whistle blows to call us outside. We shiver in the dark cold as section leaders call the roll, mostly from memory. The second section of the first platoon is always the last to finish roll call. We stand there listening. "P-o-g-g-il" "Hyoh!" "Pulver!" "Here!" and then the piece de resistence: "Peacock!" Always the answer comes in the same way—an unbelievably deep bass, long-drawn-out and rumbling: "Heeeeeeere!" The second platoon snickers and titters, just as it did the day before, and the top kick shouts, "Dismissed!"

Bushemi heads straight back for his bunk. "Call me at chowtime, will you?"

Bill, a friend of Bushemi's and mine in Charlotte, drives a street bus. Before he began his service as a driver, he served a hitch in the Army. Like all ex-service men, he's ready to drop everything and just shoot the breeze any time the conversation turns to the Army.

"There was a young first-class private got on my bus last week," he told me, "and he sat in the long seat behind me, so we got started talking. Well, I thought I'd snow him under, telling him about the time I was in the Army. So, just to start the ball rolling and get the talk turned to the Army, I asked him how long he'd been in.

"'Oh, I've been in for well over eight months,' he said, like he was just starting his thirtieth year of service. Then he started wiping his sleeves so I'd be sure to notice his private-first-class stripe.

"I thought I'd let him blow off about his stripe, so I asked him, 'Say, what does that stripe stand for?'

"'Oh, that,' he said, as much as to say aw-shucks-that-ain't-nothing. 'That just means I'm a sergeant.'

"'Is that right?' I asked him, looking sort of widemouthed at him.

"'Yessir,' he said, real casual, 'in the Army only eight months and I've already been made sergeant.'

"'Well, tell me,' I said, 'what grade of sergeant are you? I've seen some sergeants have three stripes and then I've seen them have as many as six. How come that?'

THE CAUSE OF ACNE

I write frequently about acne because this skin blemish spoils the lives and often affects the minds of our teen age boys and girls, just when life is at its best for them. Thus whenever a new or different method of treatment of acne is reported from responsible sources, I pass it along to my readers.

Dr. Barton

For years it was believed that acne is caused by gland changes, particularly in the sex glands, because the great majority of cases start at this time.

That these glands have much to do with causing acne in a direct way or indirectly because of the way foods are handled in the body was proven recently. Physicians were able to cause acne by injecting gland extracts into young men and women whose skin had been perfectly clear. By stopping the use of these extracts, the skin became free of acne again.

What about the use of this gland treatment in cases where acne is present? Doctors Charles H. Lawrence and Nicholas T. Werthessen, Boston, in the Journal of Clinical Endocrinology, present the result of estrogen or ovary extract treatment in 25 acne patients (14 females and 11 males). The average age of the females was about 26 years and of the males 20 years. The average length of time the acne had been present was about nine years.

Twenty patients received dishystilbestrol .5 mg. daily until their ability to withstand this dose was determined. In 17 the dose was then increased to 1 mg. daily and in two mature males with severe chronic acne, the dose was increased to 1.5 to 2 mg. daily. Five patients received ethinyl estradiol, .15 daily, increased to .3 mg. if response was not satisfactory.

What were results obtained? Fifteen patients (60 per cent) became free from acne in two to six months. Two others in which treatment had been interrupted became free in eight to nine months. The remaining patients are still under treatment and show improvement. No patient completely failed to improve.

The above proves what physicians have believed for many years; that is that some disturbance or lack of balance between the sex glands in certain individuals is the cause of acne.

Children Should Stand and Sit Erect

Your youngster has now returned to school and you have likely had any condition of the teeth and tonsils inspected and when necessary treated by the family physician and dentist. If so, it is not likely that you will receive any note from the school physician unless, of course, there is need for an examination of the eyes.

However, it is possible that your youngster will need some attention of which, perhaps, the school physician and nurse may not notify you. I refer to the round shoulders and drooping head which is common among school children.

What causes round shoulders?

In America, we consider round shoulders to be due to fatigue, carelessness or weakness. In Great Britain they consider that round shoulders cause the fatigue and weakness.

In most cases the round shoulders are due to carelessness of the child, and the thoughtlessness of parents in not making the youngster stand erect and sit erect.

Other cases are due to tiredness or to weakness, and here again parents can prevent round shoulders by seeing that the youngster gets plenty of rest.

Food enters into the matter of erect carriage. Fortunately most children are fond of food and the diet in most households is rich in vitamins, minerals, proteins, fruits and sugar. Cod liver oil helps those who are a little "droopy."

The simplest way to prevent round shoulders and maintain an erect carriage at all times is to stand tall and sit tall at all times. Sitting and standing tall draws shoulders back, throws out the chest, and flattens or draws in the abdomen. Having your child stand "naturally" sideways to a mirror, and then stand as tall as he can, shows him instantly how good he looks when he stands erect.

Improved Uniform International SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By HAROLD L. LUNDQUIST, D. D.
Of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.

Lesson for October 24

HONORING OUR PARENTS

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:12; Luke 2:48-51; Mark 7:6-13; John 19:25-27.

GOLDEN TEXT—Children, obey your parents in the Lord: for this is right.—Ephesians 6:1.

Right relations between children and parents have much to do with the peace and prosperity of a community and a nation. Experience has demonstrated that to be true, but even more basic is the fact that it is in accord with the promise of God.

One of the sad breakdowns in modern life is that of proper honor and obedience to parents by children. In all too many homes God's order has been reversed and instead of honoring and obeying their parents, children (both young and old) have taken the place of "boss," and mother and father must obey if they want peace and rest.

The need for our lesson of today is both great and acute. The future happiness of hundreds of thousands of children and the present welfare of thousands of neglected and boss-ridden parents will depend on the intelligence and faithfulness with which this lesson is taught in our churches, and the honesty of heart with which we all receive its truth.

I. The Command and Promise (Exod. 20:12).

We are told by Paul that this is the "first commandment with promise" (Eph. 6:1-3). The Lord was not making a bargain with man, or seeking to draw out obedience by a prize, but there is obviously a great reward in the observing of this commandment.

Then, too, as the children of God (if we are such) through Jesus Christ, the first and most important consideration to come before us is, What is the mind and will of the Maker of us all regarding this matter of the relation between parents and children? His words are plain—we are to "honor" our fathers and our mothers.

The word "honor" carries with it a great many things, but perhaps the three outstanding elements are respect, obedience, and affection.

Our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the Saviour and then the Example of believers, presents a beautiful pattern of true obedience to this commandment.

II. Willing Obedience (Luke 2:48-51; John 19:25-27).

The fact that Jesus was God manifest in the flesh only enhanced His conduct. He who is divine presents an example of obedience and consideration both as boy and man which we do well to emulate.

1. As a Boy (Luke 2:48-51). The boy Jesus, increasing "in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man" (v. 52), had come to His twelfth year and with His parents had gone up to Jerusalem to celebrate the Passover.

There moved in His heart the conviction that He must now be about His Father's business—an altogether proper and commendable purpose, but one which resulted for the moment in separation from His parents. This was far more serious than a physical separation, for we read that they did not understand Him (v. 50).

Tragic indeed are the consequences of our failure to understand our children. Notice, however, that Jesus did not withdraw Himself from their watchful care, nor refuse to obey them even though they failed to understand Him. Equally tragic are the results of hasty and bitter separations brought about by the disobedience of children.

2. As a Man (John 19:25-27). The value of our lesson will be greatly reduced if we see only the responsibility of children while they are young. We are the children of our parents as long as we and they live.

One marvels at the carelessness and hardness of heart that will permit men and women who have time and money for everything else, to neglect their aged parents and even shunt them off into a public institution for care.

III. Hypocritical Disobedience (Mark 7:6-13).

Such an important commandment naturally held a high place in the thinking of the community. To violate it involved a measure of shame which men sought to avoid. So the Jews of Christ's day devised a scheme which made it possible for a man to appear to be very religious even as he deprived his parents of the honor and help to which they were entitled by the law of God.

The man who was so avaricious that he did not wish to support his aged and needy parents could entirely evade that God-given responsibility by declaring that his property was "Corban," that is, dedicated by a vow to God. Thereafter no matter how great was the need of his parents they could receive nothing.

Thus do men make "the word of God of none effect" (v. 13) through their traditions. The method differs but the spirit persists even in our day.

It may be caused by disorder of kidney function that permits poisonous waste to accumulate. For truly many people feel tired, weak and miserable when the kidneys fail to remove excess acids and other waste matter from the blood.

You may suffer nagging backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling. Sometimes frequent and scanty urination with smarting and burning is another sign that something is wrong with the kidneys or bladder.

There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. It is better to rely on a medicine that has won country-wide approval than on something less favorably known. Doan's have been tried and tested many years. Are at all drug stores. Get Doan's today.

DEBATE concerning the selection of any all-time football team is a never-ending affair. It is extremely unlikely that any two followers of the game would choose the same eleven men as their favorites.

In the backfield alone it's almost impossible to pick out any four men from the following group—Bronko Nagurski, Red Grange, Jim Thorpe, Cliff Battles, Dutch Clark, Sammy Baugh, Ernie Nevers and Ace Parker. And there are others that deserve mention. The list of great linemen is just as endless.

Most fans would pick Nagurski on any all-time team. Thorpe is another player that immediately springs to mind. Both of them proved their unquestionable fitness to occupy a niche in football's hall of fame. Their records are well known.

There are others who are, for one reason or another, less widely known to today's sports followers. Ken Strong is one. Pudge Heffelfinger is another. Both have had considerable publicity, especially the latter, but neither gets as much space in the record books.

About Ken Strong

Big Steve Owen of the New York Giants believes that no all-time team is complete without Ken Strong. As a sophomore at New York university under Chick Meehan, Strong was one of the best blocking backs of all time. He weighed 205 pounds and was speedier than most 170-pound backs.

Later on he was switched to a ball carrier and passer. According to Owen, "he was one of the best ball carriers I ever saw, college and pro. He was one of the best college or pro passers in the game. He was one of the three best kickers pro football ever knew . . . There was no position in the backfield where he wasn't an outstanding star. I don't mean good. I mean great."

When N.Y.U. defeated a strong Carnegie Tech team—which already had whipped a powerful Notre Dame squad—Judd Walter Steffens, Tech coach, said:

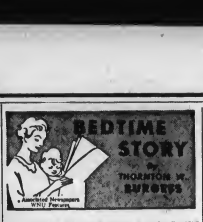
"I would never have believed that one man could wreck the team I had on the field today. He (Strong) ran over them and around them. He hit 225 pound Karcis so hard I was afraid he had killed him. He is the best ball carrier I ever saw—one of the best passers I ever saw—as good a blocker as I ever saw—and certainly the best kicker I ever saw—including Jim Thorpe."

Strong lacked only one thing—the color which causes athletes to grab—and keep—the spotlight. But he had everything else.

Pudge Heffelfinger

Heffelfinger is better known to the older generation, and with good reason. Pudge was named All-America guard on Walter Camp's first team in 1889. The fact that a large smattering of present day gridiron followers are familiar with his record is evidence of his greatness.

Nagurski's present comeback recalls tales of Heffelfinger's amazing durability and stamina. At the age of 44 he went back to see how Yale was getting along. He came close to ruining the Yale line, which was one of the best.



Nine years later, when he was 53, Pudge played 58 minutes in a professional game at Columbus. Bo McMillin, then 22 years old, was his quarterback.

As remarkable a thing of its kind as the sports world has seen was Pudge's activity at the age of 65. He played through a 15-minute period in another pro game for charity, and the men who played against him declared he was still a good football player.

So Nagurski's comeback isn't so miraculous, even though he had been out of football for the past six years.

SPORTS SHORTS

- Georgia Tech once offered a football scholarship to Martin Marion, rangy shortstop of the St. Louis Cardinals.
- Jimmy Thomson, golf's long hitter, has lost 18 pounds since joining the coast guard.
- Jockey Ted Atkinson rode in 1,200 races in 1942.
- Fred Kelly, winner of the high hurdle championship in the Olympic games of 1912, has logged 17,500 flight hours as an army transport pilot.

CHATTERER DECIDES TO LIVE

AT FIRST, Chatterer the Red Squirrel decided that he would rather die than live in a prison, no matter how nice that prison might be. It was a very foolish thing to do, but he made up his mind that he just wouldn't eat. He wouldn't touch that nice yellow corn Farmer Brown's Boy had put in his prison for him. He would starve himself to death. Yes, sir, he would starve himself to death. So, when he found that there was no way to get out of his prison, he curled up in the little hollow stump where no one could see him and made up his mind that he would stay there until he died. Life wasn't worth living if he had to spend all the rest of his days in a prison. He wouldn't even make himself comfortable. There was a little heap of nice shavings and bits of rag for him to make a nice comfortable bed, but he didn't touch them. No, sir, he just tried to make himself miserable.

Not once that long day did he poke so much as the tip of his nose out of his little round doorway. Ever so many times Farmer Brown's Boy came to see him and whistled and called softly to him, but Chatterer didn't make a sound. At last, night came and the woodshed where his prison was grew darker and darker and very still. Now, it was about this time that Chatterer's stomach began to make itself felt. Chatterer tried not to notice it, but his stomach would be noticed and Chatterer couldn't help himself. His stomach was empty and it kept telling him so.

Farmer Brown's Boy whistled softly to him.

"I'm going to starve to death," said Chatterer to himself over and over.

"I'm empty and there is plenty of food to fill me up, if you'll only stop being silly," whispered his stomach.

The more Chatterer tried not to think of how good something to eat would taste the more he did think of it. It made him restless and uneasy. He twisted and squirmed and turned. At last, he decided that he would have one more look to see if he couldn't find some way to get out of his prison. He poked his head out of the little round doorway. All was still and dark. He listened, but no sound could be heard. Then he softly crept out and hurriedly examined all the inside of his prison once more. It was of no use! There wasn't a single place where he could use his sharp teeth.

"There's that little pile of corn waiting for me," whispered his stomach.

"I'll never touch it!" said Chatterer fiercely.

Just then he hit something with his foot and it rolled. He picked it up and then put it down again. It was a nut, a plump hickory nut. Two or three times he picked it up and put it down, and each time it was harder than before to put it down.

"I-I-I'd like to taste one more nut before I starve to death," muttered Chatterer, and almost without knowing it he began to gnaw the hard shell. When that nut was finished he found another, and when that was gone still another. Then he just had to taste a grain of corn. The first thing Chatterer knew the nuts and corn were all gone and his stomach was full. Somehow he felt ever so much better. He didn't feel like starving to death.

"I-I believe I'll wait a bit and see what happens," said he to himself. "And while I'm waiting I might as well be comfortable."

With that he began to carry the shavings and rags into the hollow stump, and soon he had as comfortable a bed as ever he had slept on Chatterer had decided to live.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

South America supplied 65 per cent of the world's rubber needs in 1890, while in 1922 only about 6 per cent came from that section. Far East plantation development accounts for the drop in the demand for Amazon Valley rubber.

Synthetic rubber is defined as a man-made combination of molecules that form a substance having the chief characteristics of crude rubber.

In 1938 the total of American-controlled rubber plantations was about 260,000 acres, mostly in the Far East. These plantations produced 40,000 tons annually, or about 8 per cent of U. S. imports.

ON THE HOME FRONT with RUTH WYETH SPEARS

THE war is bringing many changes in the things we use and the things we do. Women as well as men are learning to handle tools. If a chair is lacking we make one. If we cannot have springs we find a way to make it comfortable anyway. That is the spirit of the times.

Perhaps you have made lawn chairs all with straight cuts of the hand saw. Have you ever stopped to realize that it is almost as easy to cut curves with a compass saw? Curves add comfort as well as beauty and a tufted cushion distributes the weight so that springs are not missed so much. The curved pieces of the charming chair sketched here are shown at the left. You can see how easy they are to cut out of odds and ends of one-inch lumber that you may have on hand. The reinforcing pieces are all straight cuts.

NOTE—Mrs. Spears has prepared an actual-size pattern for all the curved sections of this chair. Complete dimensions and directions for the chair construction and for making the tufted cushion, with list of materials included. This is pattern 265 and costs 15 cents. Send your order to:

History Made in Bathroom

There's an interesting picture of Prime Minister Churchill and President Roosevelt working together in "How War Came to America," just published in England.

When Mr. Churchill was staying at the White House in December, 1941, he and the President were looking for the right phrase to describe the Allied nations. In bed on the morning of the 31st President Roosevelt had an inspiration. He got up at once to seek Mr. Churchill—and found him in his bath. Quoting from the book: "'How about the "United Nations"?' he called out, as Churchill brought his soapy head above water. The prime minister ducked again to rinse the last of the soap from his eyes, shook his head, and turned a dripping gaze on the President. 'That,' he said, 'should do it.'"

And that — from one master phrase-maker to another—was a real tribute.

It's HIGH TIME to Change in Kentucky!

For 12 years now, state administration has been in the hands of a gang!

In spite of changes in outward leadership, the gang has remained unchanged. Its policy, from first to last, has been to keep itself in power.

And so we have seen the waste of money and the abuse of trust. We have seen sleepers on the payroll and leeches on the public purse. We have heard of deals and bargains and conspiracies against the general interest. We have read of political assessments against state employees and illegal contributions to campaign funds. We have seen the public service degraded and standards of honor cast aside. We have borne a heavier and heavier burden of taxation.

By these means, the machine has fattened and grown strong, until now we can free ourselves from it only by united and resolute action.

YOU can help save Kentucky

The Republican party, by nominating nine independent and able citizens pledged to the elimination of political gangsterism, offers the opportunity for freedom and good government. By supporting them, we strike a blow for liberty and take sides against dishonor.

From where I sit...

by Joe Marsh

Vic Buxton was home on furlough last week. And you ought to see the fuss the town made over him.

Seemed like almost everybody wanted to give a party, or stage something special in the way of celebration.

Of course, Vic acted grateful. But he told me later, all he really wanted was to sit down with a few old friends—to relax in home surroundings, and talk about old times again.

I guess that's how a lot of soldiers feel. They want to enjoy the old familiar things—old friends, quiet talk, and a moderate wholesome glass of beer.

And from where I sit, I don't see why anyone would want to take those things away from them. Do you?

The Girl Reserve Club of Walton-Verona held its impressive Recognition Service at the Walton Christian Church, Sunday, Oct. 17th at 3:30 o'clock.

After the processional, the new president, Ruth Dearing, welcomed the audience which participated in the ceremony by singing a hymn.

Five Girl Reserves, Cordelia Leathers, Jean Pennington, Wanda Collins, Mary Hope Chipman, and Mary Louise McCubbin, explained the Girl Reserve Emblem- a triangle within a circle. At the conclusion of this, Betty Jean Wills led in the singing of a Prayer Song.

The song "Living For Jesus" was sung by six girls, Jeanette Grubbs, Mary Hope Chipman, Georgia Collins, Nell Gordon, Ruth Dearing, and Wanda Collins.

The speaker of the occasion was Mrs. R. F. DeMoisey who has been selected by the girls for three years for this service. In her usual gracious manner, Mrs. DeMoisey delivered an inspiring talk which was much appreciated by the entire audience.

Mrs. Conner, Mrs. Johnson, and Mrs. Wills sang beautifully an appropriate song entitled "Talents".

The last part of the program consisted of the impressive Candlelighting Cermony conducted by the club sponsor, Miss Sleet, in which the new officers, and both old and new members lighted their candles in token of a pledge of service to the ideals of the Girl Reserve Club.

Wartime Lighting Suggestions
HOW TO GET MORE LIGHT FROM YOUR PRESENT EQUIPMENT

Use One Large Bulb Instead of Several Smaller Ones
Offhand it would seem that four 25-watt bulbs would produce the same amount of light as one 100-watt bulb. But such is not the case. A 100-watt bulb produces as much light as SIX 25-watt bulbs, yet uses one-third less current. Therefore, when practical, always use one large bulb instead of several smaller ones of same total wattage and you'll get more light for your money.

OTHER WAYS TO CONSERVE LIGHT
1. Remove and clean lamp bulbs and lamp bowls regularly. Dry thoroughly before using again.
2. Keep shade linings light. Clean or brush regularly. Repaint or reline dark-colored paper or parchment shades.
3. Sit close enough to the lamp to get all the help it can give your eyes.
4. Avoid direct glare from lamp bulbs by using shades deep enough and wide enough.
5. Arrange furniture so one lamp can serve two people. But be sure lamp is not too far away from either person.
6. Turn off lamps not in use. Lamp bulbs use critical materials... Make them last longer.

Electricity ...is vital to war production. Use all you need but don't waste it's fast because it's cheap and isn't rationed.

WEEKLY NEWS ANALYSIS

Rains Slow Allied Advance in Italy; Strategic Use of Aircraft Paves Way To Successes in Southwest Pacific; U. S. Food Output Drops 7 Per Cent

(EDITOR'S NOTE: When opinions are expressed in these columns, they are those of Western Newspaper Union's news analysis and not necessarily of this newspaper.)
Released by Western Newspaper Union.

These Japanese-Americans are shown moving to fighting front in Italy. Recruited in Hawaii, they are loyal to the flag of their adopted country.

ITALY:
Slowed by Rains

With rain swelling the normally shallow and narrow Volturno river into a raging torrent, and the downpours bogging down movement of heavy equipment, fighting in Italy was slowed.

Gen. Bernard Montgomery

As the first rays of sunshine began to peep through, however, Lieut. Gen. Mark Clark's Fifth army was organized for assault of German positions across the Volturno as artillery fire laid down a cover of shells.

To the east, Gen. Bernard Montgomery's Eighth army faced difficult going. Besides clinging stubbornly to mountain positions, the Germans rushed an armored division to this sector to help delay the British by fighting in the open plains, which lie between the rugged heights.

In declaring war on Germany, the government of King Victor Emmanuel of Italy was given status as co-belligerent by the Allies, that is, partnership in the actual fighting, but not in political councils. To assist the Italians in the fight, the Allies were reported ready to supply materials and extend lend-lease aid.

SOUTHWEST PACIFIC:
Make Use of Air

The part aircraft is playing in the jungle and mountain warfare in the Southwest Pacific has been brought to light with accounts of the Allies' steady march northward in New Guinea.

With the thick growth and rocky terrain making overland travel slow and difficult, air transports have been flying over these obstacles to land troops close to Jap bases. After disembarking the troops, the transports then take off to return again with supplies with which to carry on the battle.

Because of this strategic use of the air, the Allies have cleared better than half of the eastern coast of New Guinea, and now are slowly driving further northward toward the important Jap airplane base of Wewak, from which the enemy have been sending fighters and bombers against Allied positions.

RUSSIA:
Cross Dnieper

Germany's whole Dnieper river line was threatened with Russian troops fighting in force on two sectors of the western bank of the broad waterway.

It was this line that Hitler ordered held at all costs, and German generals counter-attacked the Russians in force, with the intention of smashing the Reds before they could develop their drives and leave them too weak to carry on a major offensive.

In the north, the Reds pressed against the German fortress of Vitebsk, key to the Nazis' defensive system in the Baltic states. The Reds reportedly massed great strength in the region, since a big break-through would not only open the gates to the Baltic states, but also cut off Nazi land communication with Leningrad, and put the Russians at the German rear.

MISCELLANY:

IMPLEMENTS: Output of farm machinery will be doubled in 1944 under government permission, according to Lee Marshall, director of materials in the War Foods administration. Rationing will be abolished on two-thirds of the 91 farm machinery items now on the list, and distribution controls on the entire list will be "cut in half." Tractors will continue to be rationed.

CROPS:
7% Under '42

Despite a 12 per cent rise in the volume of livestock, poultry and eggs, U. S. food production in 1943 is expected to drop 7 per cent below last year. Because of a scarcity of feed grains, however, animals will not be finished off as customarily.

Corn production is estimated at 3,055,605,000 bushels against 3,175,-154,000 last year; wheat 835,816,000 bushels against 981,327,000; oats 1,-148,692,000 bushels against 1,358,730,-000, and barley 336,212,000 bushels against 426,150,000. At 115,000,000 tons, feed grain output would be about 9,000,000 tons below 1942.

Although soybean production, at 206,000,000 bushels, is expected to drop slightly below last year, the department of agriculture is looking forward to bumper crops of potatoes, rice, beans, peas and peanuts. Oilseeds should equal last year's yields.

Good weather in September enabled farmers to speed harvesting of late crops. Outside of the corn belt, many beans intended for harvest were cut for hay, partly because of drouth damage and partly to increase ordinary fodder.

Food to Allies

During the first eight months of 1943, the U. S. has shipped more than seven billion pounds of food to its Allies under lend-lease, of which the British empire received 69 per cent and Russia 23 per cent.

Of the total amount of food sent abroad, shipments of pork represented 15 per cent of our total supply; lamb and mutton 12 per cent of supply, and beef and veal, 1 per cent.

Shipments of cheese totaled 11 per cent of supply; milk products 3 per cent; butter, 1 per cent; dried beans and peas 11 per cent; dried fruits 21 per cent, and canned fruits and vegetables, 1 per cent.

In all, 9 per cent of our total food supply was shipped during the first eight months, compared with 6 per cent last year.

LABOR:
Back to Fold

Six hundred forty-five thousand miners were ready to return to the ranks of the American Federation of Labor upon the AFL's acceptance of John L. Lewis' application for re-entrance.

John L. Lewis

The United Mine Workers' return to the AFL, however, rested upon final settlement of the AFL's demand that the UMW's District 50 withdraw from organizing workers in other fields in which the AFL already has unions.

In leading his 645,000 miners back into the AFL fold, Lewis completed a historic chapter in U. S. labor history, which first saw him leave the AFL to organize the CIO on the principle of unionizing all workers within an industry, and then quit it because of political differences.

Although Lewis' plea for readmittance highlighted the AFL convention in Boston, the Negroes' demand for full membership in AFL unions threw the meeting into a turmoil. No action was taken, however.

CIVILIAN GOODS:
May Make More

Because production schedules for some types of military and naval equipment can be reduced and the favorable turn in Allied fortunes in Europe will allow army and navy officials to plan their needs more accurately, an appreciable percentage of American industry may be reconverted to the manufacture of civilian goods. The announcement followed reports of overproduction of some material.

CHINESE:
Could Come to U. S.

Repeal of the exclusion laws forbidding immigration of Chinese into this country, and the granting of citizenship to Chinese who might immigrate or who already reside in the U. S., was advocated by President Roosevelt as the house prepared to act on a measure providing the Chinese with these privileges.

The President said that quotas would allow 105 Chinese to immigrate to the U. S. annually, and, he added, "there can be no reasonable apprehension that any such number of immigrants will cause unemployment or . . . competition in the search for jobs." At the present, foreign born Chinese cannot obtain citizenship in the U. S., and there are 37,242 of them here.

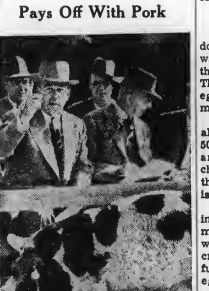
Congress should repeal the exclusion laws, President Roosevelt said, ". . . as another meaningful display of friendship for a gallant ally."

GAS:
Western Rations Cut

Because military requirements total 43 per cent of their gasoline consumption, the value of A, B and C gas ration coupons in ten far western states were cut from four to three gallons.

This compares with two gallons for B and C coupons in other areas. Hint of further cut in the far western ration was dropped with the prediction that military requirements would approximate 52 per cent of the section's consumption in 1944.

Pipes Move Oil



Over 9,277 miles of pipe lines are now moving crude oil to refineries, with over 360,000 barrels being delivered daily to the Atlantic seaboard.

Made necessary by military use of the tankers which once supplied the East with most of its oil, total mileage of pipe lines will reach 10,888 when the 256 million dollar construction program is completed.

Besides laying of new pipe, the direction of oil flow over 3,000 miles of pipe line was reversed, and more than 2,700 miles of old pipe was dug up and moved to new locations.

By the summer of 1944, it is expected that over 700,000 barrels of oil will move daily through the lines to the East. In the celebrated "big inch" pipe line, the oil flows at a speed of 4½ miles per hour.

Pays Off With Pork

When the recent bond drive got under way, Governor Dwight Griswold of Nebraska (with hand upraised in picture) bet other governors that his state would beat theirs in exceeding its quota.

Griswold lost his bets, however, and here is shown attending a 4-H auction in Omaha, bidding for hogs with which to pay off his wagers.

In payment of one bet, Griswold sent a fancy porker to Governor John C. Vivian of Colorado. But much to Governor Vivian's dismay, he discovered that he would have to surrender 700 ration points, equal to 20 weeks' supply, to have the hog butchered.

HOGS:
Hit Ceiling

Even though the government estimated 1943 spring pig production at 74,050,000, marketings at 27 federally inspected packing plants during the first week of price ceilings totaled 578,057, or only 0.78 per cent of the number of hogs on farms.

During the same period, practically all types of hogs brought the $14.75 top. The same condition prevailed as the second week of marketing under the ceiling began, with only younger pigs, some thin sows and some heavy stags and boars dropping below the $14.75 mark.

The 1943 spring pig production compared with 61,013,000 in 1942 and 49,234,000 in 1941.

PAPER:
Future Cuts Possible

Newspapers and other users of wood pulp paper will be reduced to 48 per cent of their present supplies next year unless the pulpwood industry can obtain additional labor, a group of American, Canadian and British paper leaders declared.

The committee advanced two proposals, the first restricting printing and wrapping papers to 52 per cent of their 1943 quotas, and the other trimming all paper usage.

The Washington MERRY-GO-ROUND

DREW PEARSON

Washington, D. C.

BRITAIN VS. RUSSIA

One thing which distressed the Flying Senators on their round-the-world inspection was the intense rivalry between the British and Russians in the Near East.

The senators reported that around the Gulf of Persia, where the Russians take delivery on U. S. lend-lease airplanes, the British local commander at first refused to let the Russians set up a local lend-lease receiving agency. The Gulf of Persia long has been coveted by land-locked Russia as a means of reaching the sea. British opposition presumably was based on this.

Finally the British government in London ruled that the Russians could send an airplane mission to the Gulf of Persia, but even then the local British commander, according to the senators, delayed and tried to block the plan.

Now, however, the Russians are established at the head of the Gulf and work in close cooperation with U. S. officials. To save manpower, the U. S. army uses skirted natives to assemble airplanes under the supervision of sergeants and doughboys. Then the planes are turned over to the Russians for inspection. In test flights, the Russians cruise all over the Gulf of Persia area, obviously have ample opportunity to map out the terrain.

The Russian base is commanded by a five-wire young general who gets along well with the Americans but is eyed with some suspicion by the British.

The senators also reported that when the British were a bit starchy about letting the Russians use the airport at Teheran, capital of Iran, farther north, the Russian army sent in a regiment one night and, without further argument, took over the airport. Since then the British have had to ask the Russians for permission to use it.

These are a few of the delicate problems facing the Allies in this suspicious, balance-of-power section of the Near East, where, according to the senators, the chief topic of conversation is the political tug-of-war between Russia and Britain.

PATRIOTIC U. S. HENS

The hens of America are really doing all right by Uncle Sam. Their war effort is producing more eggs than the country has ever seen. Though we are sending 10 billion eggs overseas, 50 billion more remain for our frying pans.

This total of 60 billion eggs is an all-time high. Even the domestic 50 billion is an all-time high. Passed around to every man, woman and child, it means 346 eggs apiece for the year, or about one a day. This is a lot better than the average.

At the moment, eggs are "tight" in the market, because this is the moulting season, when laying always falls off. But eggs will increase again when the hens resume full-time production, also when the egg-drying business falls off.

This is a new and unexpected turn of events. The tremendously expanded egg-drying business was expected to take a full 20 per cent of our egg crop, but now the estimates are dropping fast. Reason is the British and Russians, after two years of dried egg diet, are getting tired of them. They are politely telling the combined food board and lend lease, "Don't pass those dried eggs around any more."

The dried egg business used a modest 10 million pounds before the war, mostly for cake flour and confectionery purposes. But the submarines have made shipping space so tight that space is not available for shell eggs, and the dried egg business has shot up to a capacity of about 400 million pounds.

Some of this capacity is now idle, because of Allied distaste for the product, so more fresh eggs will come onto the U. S. market.

ARMY ADVISES HOUSEWIVES

The quartermaster corps feeds so many thousands of mothers' sons that it now dares to tell those mothers how to prepare a roast of beef.

Experiments in army camps show that if you cook a roast at relatively low temperatures, you will have 20 per cent more roast at the end. Cooking at high temperatures shrinks the meat, and dries up the juices.

According to QMC, the desirable range of temperature is 315 to 350 degrees Fahrenheit. Cooking an eight pound roast at this temperature will require 4 hours and 10 minutes.

In other words, it takes more time than at a higher temperature (at 400 degrees, it takes only 3 hours), but you save the juices, save vitamins, and will have more roast to slice.

WAR CHAFF

¶ Officials estimate that if Russia gets out of the war, Germany will be able to double or triple the number of fighter planes which now oppose Allied bombers from England. ¶ Many Flying Fortress pilots are not big six-footers, but little fellows who have to stuff a cushion behind themselves in the driver's seat. ¶ Experts who know Italy say there are 1,400 railroad bridges in that country, destruction of which from the air would cripple German troop movements completely.

Senators See Nazi Collapse 'Any Time'; War's End in '45

Cumulative Effects of Defeats on All Fronts, Plus Bombing of Cities, Expected to Hasten German Defeat.

By BAUKHAGE
News Analyst and Commentator.

WNU Service, Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

"It is my guess that the war will end by 1945," the senator said. "The collapse of Germany may come any time."

Pencils slid over copy paper. Mine, too. We sat around the long, green, committee-room table in the Senate Office building. Other press and radio men (and women) and a few visitors listened to the three senators who had made a 40,000-mile trip beginning in Maine, up through Nova Scotia, through Greenland, Iceland, Great Britain, Africa, the Near East, India, China, Australia, the Pacific islands, and back home.

I thought as I took down the notes for my broadcast that I wished many of the people who write to me, calling congress dumb, were there to listen to these men regaling us with first-hand information, facts, figures, impressions, which later they were to pass on to their colleagues in the form of long and detailed reports. Much of the material will never be printed.

The trip was spoofed by the papers, when it was proposed, as "another junket." But sitting there, listening to these men, there was no doubt in my mind that they had done a real job. They had slept in gaudy villas in Africa, they had camped in the fields with the troops, lain under thatched roofs, in bamboo shelters, taken their chances across wide sweeps of water in planes unaccompanied by any fighter protection. They had tried to find out the things you and I want to know—how the war is being fought.

Reasons Why

You have already read the gist of what those senators—and Senator Lodge, who made the journey, plus a side trip—said. The information will come out in reports and speeches before the senate and the house.

It was a long session but the thing that struck me was the second sentence which I quoted at the beginning of this article.

"The collapse of Germany may come at any time."

These men didn't pretend to be military experts or prophets. That statement of one of them—Senator Russell of Georgia—to which the others, Senators Mead of New York and Brewster of Maine, agreed, was based on what they had heard and seen including photographs of what Russell called "leveled Hamburg" . . . by the time this is in print there may be other German cities leveled as flat.

Another thing was the testimony of a French official who believed Germany would crumble soon. He was anxious that America be prepared to step in and take control. Unless we did, he insisted, chaos would spread, perhaps anarchy.

I have heard that fear expressed by other Europeans.

Basis of Belief

What is the basis of the belief that Germany will collapse suddenly and perhaps soon? On the belief that history will, in some measure, repeat itself as it always does. That the civilian morale will crumble in Germany, that the spirit of hopelessness will spread to the army as it did in 1918.

Already we know that submarine crews no longer volunteer. They have to be drafted. This is where the rift began in Germany's morale in the last war.

And what will contribute most to Germany's collapse?

Not the Russian victories alone; not the drive that will come when, as many believe, the British-American operations are intensified. These will turn the scale. But the cumulative effect of defeats on all fronts plus the bombing of her cities already at work will bring "victory through air power."

The Germans, a very high British official said to us not long ago, are a logical people. When the realization of the hopelessness of further fighting is established, they will begin the logical process of surrender.

And if you read the report of Chief of Staff General Marshall, you will see how the realization of the growth of Allied air power spreads slowly over the whole battle scene.

"The army air forces," says the general, "are now attacking the enemy on ten different fronts throughout the world. Their victories, wherever they come in contact with the enemy, testify to the gallantry and skill of American pilots and crews, to the mechanical efficiency of the planes and to the leadership of General Arnold and . . . (the other commanders)."

History of the War

Go through General Marshall's dramatic history of the war to date and you will see again and again how the Allied air might has gradually risen from the days in the "first phase" when, as the general says, "on all fighting fronts we were in a desperate situation due to lack of material," into the "later phase" when in the southwest Pacific, "air superiority was demonstrated by a loss ratio of four to one in our favor," until today when "the combined American - British bomber offensive against the continent of Europe gives promise of being a decisive factor in the ultimate destruction of the German citadel."

Now that the Allies are in possession of the Foggia air bases in Italy, we can reach what the President described as the area of Germany hitherto "invulnerable." We are nearer the southern German cities now than the air force in the British Isles is to many of the cities against which it has hurled its most devastating blows, and those cities of southern Germany and Austria, hitherto "safe" are now as "vulnerable" as the cities of the Rhine and Ruhr, as Hamburg and Cologne.

The war is not over. The fighting potential of the German army, in number of men, equipment, generalship, supplies, and morale is as high as ever. But as I sat in the Senate Office building and heard the prediction, "the collapse of Germany may come at any time," my mind went back to the anxious faces, the nervous inquiries, that came to me the day that Britain and France declared war and I waited to leave Berlin where I had been broadcasting to America.

The greatest fear of the average German then was the fear of American participation in the war. We couldn't, the stupid leaders believed, "get there in time if we wanted to." They didn't guess we would come via the skyways. Now they know.

(Note: To anyone wishing a complete copy of the "record which Americans will never forget," which is what the President called "General Marshall's fine, soldierly record of achievements of our army throughout two of the most tremendous years of our history," I shall be glad to send a copy. Simply send me your name and address. No charge. See address at head of column.)

We Need Scrap

The words "all out" and "drive" have just about lost their meaning.

And yet, somehow, somewhere, iron and steel scrap has to be collected. There is plenty of it in the country. For the government to collect it, it would take an army. There is only one way it can be gotten. That is through individual effort. It involves no cost. It simply requires a little effort and some time.

The mills now have only enough scrap to last two and a half months. The shooting has just started, uncountable tons of metal are going to be dropped on the enemy in the months ahead. If you wait for someone else in your community to come and get your scrap, the army and the navy won't get the steel they need. Your initiative is essential.

MOTHER-IN-LAW CHEERS LONG SOUGHT RELIEF!

Had Been "Irregular" for Years!

Have you often despaired of ever finding normal regularity? Then, by all means, read this unsolicited letter:

"For many long years, my mother-in-law had suffered from common constipation. She used to take all kinds of pills and medicines, but got no lasting relief. Upon starting to use KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN, her trouble cleared up. She feels like a new person, she says. She wanted me to tell the world how your product helped her." Mrs. Polina Balis, 734 East 160th Street, Bronx, N. Y.

How do scientists explain the apparent "magic" of KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN's relief? Simply thus: ALL-BRAN is one of Nature's most effective sources of "cellulosic" elements — lack of which in sufficient amounts in the diet is a common cause of constipation! These elements help the friendly colonic flora fluff up and lighten the colonic wastes for easy, natural elimination. KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN doesn't work by "purging"—or by "sweeping you out." It is a gentle-acting, "regulating" food!

If this is your trouble eat KELLOGG'S ALL-BRAN regularly. Drink plenty of water! See if you don't find the welcome relief you've hoped for! Insist on genuine ALL-BRAN, made only by Kellogg's in Battle Creek.

Camels are the favorite cigarette with men in the Navy (Army, Marines, Coast Guard, too, for that matter) based on actual sales records from the service men's stores. And though there are Post Office restrictions on packages to overseas Army men, you can still send Camels to soldiers in the U. S., and to men in the Navy, Marines and Coast Guard wherever they are.—Adv.

New Diesels Operating From Cincinnati to New Orleans.

The new Diesel electric passenger locomotives of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, which until September 12 of this year had never ventured north of Louisville, Ky., are now operating all the way from New Orleans, La., to Cincinnati, O., according to the October 1943 issue of the L. & N. Magazine. The innovation which extended the run of the Diesels from Louisville to Cincinnati - they had previously been used only between Louisville and New Orleans - was made to increase mileage on locomotives, to obtain a more extensive use of them, and to reduce the number of steam engines used on regular assignments and in double-heading on the line between Louisville and Cincinnati.

The new set-up has permitted a net gain of 404 locomotive miles per day, states the Magazine, and the Diesels are now used to haul Nos. 98 and 99 (The Pan-American) and Nos. 1 and 4 (The Azalean) between Cincinnati and New Orleans; Nos. 2 and 3 between Cincinnati and Montgomery, and Nos. 37 and 38 beaween Montgomery and New Orleans.

AMONG THE COUNTY AGENTS

Homemakers' clubs in Madison county have collected 23,625 lbs. of scrap iron and 1,565 pounds of waste fat and invested $50,620 in war bonds.

Ronald Bushong, a Monroe county farmer, recently sold $50 worth of cream in one week.

From seven ewes costing him $42, Roscoe Moore of Boyd county sold lambs and wool for $126.

During September Bourbon county farmers hauled an average of 30,000 gallons of water daily from Paris.

Early seeded balbo rye was ready to pasture by Sept. 1 in Adair county, despite the drouth.

Brown McCandless of Metcalfe county sowed 250 pounds of alfalfa seed on 14 acres, after applying 49 tons of limestone and 5,500 pounds of superpospate.

Fifty-two men owning about 1,000 dairy cattle attended a meeting at Adolph Moser's in Jefferson county.

A freezer locker storage plant may be established at Walton to serve farmers in Boone, Kenton, Grant and Gallatin counties.

Drouth emphasized the value of hybrid corn in Anderson county, and it is expected that nearly all of next year's crop will be hybrid.

Seven turkey raisers in Clark county have a total of 13,800 birds.

As a result of dry weather, hybrid corn made many converts in Todd county.

Breckinridge county poultry raisers expect to have at least 3,000 choice turkeys for the Christmas market.

Fourteen Wolfe county farmers primed 5,550 pounds of tobacco from 26 acres at a cost of $6 per 100 pounds.

As human as home

WE want you to think of the L & N Railroad as a personal, friendly institution—not just steel rails, monster bridges, huge shops, big buildings, long trains and fast, powerful locomotives. That is but the physical picture. The "Old Reliable" is far more than that.

It is private and free enterprise, performing an essential public service. It is a half billion dollar investment of about 8,000 stockholders . . . now distributing about $66,000,000 in good wages to 31,000 employees and purchasing about $40,000,000 of equipment and supplies per year. Thus it quickens the commercial life of every community it serves by aiding alike the farmer, merchant, businessman and laborer.

During peacetime, the L & N performs a necessary public transportation service. In the present war, still under private ownership, it has proven even more important, capable and dependable. As compared with World War I, it is performing a phenomenal and much greater service.

At no time has any other agency done so much to develop its territory. It is the largest taxpayer in many counties and hence is a major support of schools and functions of government. Its management and extensive organization are sons of the South, who are intensely serious in aiding Southern development.

The L & N is as personal and human as its local agent, its trainmen, its officers . . . as their children who play in your streets and who go to your churches and schools . . . as all its employees who strive to be good citizens and neighbors, who serve tirelessly to meet the war's transportation job and whose 3,000 sons are at the fighting front.

When the war is won, the "Old Reliable" and its employees will work to make a better railroad, to serve you modernly and to aid in the South's inevitable growth. Its purpose and achievement point high. It is both your capable servant and friendly neighbor.

Can You Picture KENTUCKY without Highways?

A strange place it would be—this State of ours—if our splendid 9,417 mile network of improved highways suddenly ceased to exist.

A great many communities would be isolated. Others would find it infinitely more difficult to carry on even the most ordinary daily activities—with no trucks on the move, no cars or buses taking workers to war plants and farms, soldiers to camp and home on furlough, business travelers to nearby communities, children to school.

We Kentuckians are apt to take for granted the convenience of our excellent roads—but these highways didn't just grow. Building and maintaining them is a tremendous job and for achieving this successfully we can thank past and present administrations and particularly the Kentucky State Highway Department and Kentucky State Highway Commission.

That isn't the whole story, however. Transforming these lifeless ribbons of concrete and macadam into live, active arteries of public transportation has been the accomplishment of the Kentucky Public Service Commission. They've labored hard and long to give our State a transportation system that compares favorably with any other in the country.

All of us who live and work and pay taxes in Kentucky can take pride in our share in this highway system.

As fellow citizens, the Greyhound Lines have made a very large contribution in the form of license, fuel and operating taxes—but we feel that our greatest service is in putting the highways to work for the benefit of all who must travel, making near neighbors and good neighbors of all the communities we serve throughout the State.

Two And One Half Million Pounds Phosphate Used

Boone County farmers have used approximately two and one half million pounds of phosphate for soil improvement purposes during the past 18 months according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent. This is a splendid record.

The above prosphate represents 32 car loads secured as grant of aid thru the Agricultural Conservation Program. Several tons of additional prosphate and complete fertilizer has been purchased direct from dealers.

Phosphate and limestone as important soil improvement practices are past the demonstration stage. Practically every farmer in the county has seen its value.

Farmers are now faced with a golden opportunity. Supplemental Agricultural Conservation Program Allowance, for the last half of the year have been increased to where they have been practically doubled. The term under which ACP supplies important fertilizer are most generous. Every farmer who has not already ordered 100% of his unused allowance in phosphate should do so immediately.

Farm Labor Exchange Set Up

A County Farm Labor Exchange and Landlord Tenant Exchange has been set up at the County Agent's office in Burlington according to Rev. W. M. Smith, County Farm Labor Assistant.

Labor is going to be farmer's major production problem in 1944. No greater war time civilian service can be rendered than work in food production. It is hoped that then the County farm labor exchange service every farmer will be able to secure help needed to produce and harvest the maximum amount of food and fiber crops.

There are a few very important points every farmer and farm worker should seriously consider in his or her attempt to render the most efficient war service.

1. Landlords who have good tenants, and tenants who have good landlords should in every way possible plan to cooperate on the present farm. Moves are expensive. Every time there is a tenant or landlord change new help must be secured and the expense of moving and loss of labor is multiplied. There have been a large number of instances the past year when the farm labor assistant has to the satisfaction of both landlord and tenants or hired labor adjusted differences in making future contracts. Remember both good tenants are hard to get and that good landlords are hard to get.

2. The War Man Power Commission has in effect frozen agricultural labor. While labor may change from farm to farm it is most difficult to change from farm to inductrial work.

3. Efficient help is practically not available from outside of the county scources. Farmers who plan to use outside help must plan to use patience and human consideration in training new help. Boone County is one of the most deficient farm labor counties in the state.

4. We are faced with a most difficult problem. It is our war time responsibility to face this job with the very best of our brains and ability.

Lieut. Harold Conrad Home on Short Leave After Serving With The Marines In The Pacific.

First Lieutenant Harold Conrad arrived at his home Saturday after being away four years to spend a short leave with his father John Conrad and family and his many friends here.

Lieutenant Conrad has seen active duty overseas and came home from San Francisco, Calif.

He is looking fine and seems to be in the best of health.

New Tobacco Variety Produces Good Crop

Experiment Station No. 41 A, a new root rot resistant tobacco having few suckers has produced an excellent crop on the farms of John Burns and Lloyd Siekman of Petersburg, according to H. R. Forkner, County Agent.

41 A this year proved root rot resistant, a heavier yielder than No. 16 producing a larger leaf of fine quality. This variety on the above farms wa sgrown along with Experiment Station No. 16 and No. 33 varieties. Both Nos. 16 and 41A were subject in seven bottoms to Fusarium Wilt. No. 33 was practically 100% resistant to wilt and produced excellent quality leaf.

Henry L. Marsh Leaves for Great Lakes Naval Training Station.

P. C. A. Tenth Meeting Set For November 12th

The tenth Anniversary meeting of the Northern Kentucky Production Credit Association will be held on November 12, 1943, announces A. Threlkeld, President, following meeting of the Board of Directors of the Association.

The meeting will begin at 1:00 P. M. and will be held in the Idle Hour Theater at Williamstown. There will be only an afternoon session this year as no luncheon will be served, as an economy measure. It, however, is important that each member attend his meeting.

As a special feature we will honor the farm leaders who were the original incorporators ten years ago. It was through their vision and foresight that farmers were ale to develop their own cooperative credit organization", A. Threlkeld said. These incorporators were G. M. Bennett, H. W. Webb, O. B. Bracht, Chas. A. Petit, R. C. Sechrist and A Threlkeld of Williamstown; S. W. Durr, Walton; Wm. E. Inrig, Alexandria; C. A. Kelly, Fred C. Hafer, Demossville; R. H. Proctor, Owenton; Fred Neihoff, Morning View, Guy W. Collins, Crittenden; R. C. Tucker, L. D. Richards, Warsaw; Ben F. Wilson, Sparta; R. W. Davis, Glencoe; H. E. Ducker, Butler, and George W. Dr. H. B. Price, Professor of Economics, University of Kentucky, will bring the main address his subject being "What's aheard for Kentucky Farmers". This address will be of great interest to all the farmers and a large crowd is expected. Dr. Price is as well qualified as any individual in the State to discuss this all important topic.

The members will elect one director to fill the vacancy caused by the expiration of the term of A. Threlkeld.

See Here, Private Hargrove!

by Marion Hargrove

W.N.U. SERVICE

THE STORY SO FAR: Private Marion Hargrove, former feature editor of a North Carolina newspaper, has been inducted into the army and has completed a good portion of his basic training at Fort Bragg. Classified as a cook and with plenty of extra KP duty because of his failure at times to grasp some of the fundamentals of army life, he has become quite familiar with the Company kitchen. He has learned the finer points of "goldbricking" and has mastered the elements of army slang. As we pick up his story here, Hargrove is listening to a bus driver in a nearby town expand on his former army career. Hargrove suspects (and rightly so) that the truth is being stretched. The bus driver speaks:

CHAPTER XIII

"'Well,' he said, hemming and hawing a little, 'three stripes means he's just a plain buck sergeant. Six stripes is a master sergeant. I'm a supply sergeant. That's two grades above a buck sergeant and one grade below a master sergeant. I'm expecting to be a master sergeant in a month or so. That's as high as you can get.'

"I didn't say anything for a while; just sat there looking like I was letting it soak in. Then I asked him, real calm-like and ignorant. 'How many stripes does a private first class have?'

"So help me, he looked like he was going to choke for a while. Then he came back with a snappy answer in a flash.

"'Well,' he said, 'first-class privates have one stripe, just like us supply sergeants, only their stripe is bottom-upward from ours. Their stripes point down.'

"Well, sir, I thought I'd die. I almost popped trying to keep from laughing, but I kept a straight face. Then I said, 'Things sure have changed since I was in the Army. Back then, three or four years ago, supply sergeants were just plain buck sergeants and first-class privates were the only one-stripe men.'

"'Yeah,' he said, sort of weak-like, 'time changes a lot of things.'

"That was all he had to say. He looked sort of foolish and pulled the cord to get off at the next stop.

"So there was another bull session shot to hell. Maybe it was for the best, though. I didn't have a chance against a fellow with that much talent."

I ran out of cigarettes this afternoon near my old cooks' battery, so I thought I'd drop in on First Sergeant Goldsmith, who smokes the same brand that I do. Sergeant Goldsmith is the old type of top sergeant, with a heart of GI shoe leather and a voice that would put the stoutest bugle to shame.

"Great gods and little paychecks," he railed. "Look what's loose again! What's the latest, little man, or aren't reporters supposed to know?"

"The only news I've heard today," I told him, helping myself to a coffin nail from his desk, "is that they're sending all the first sergeants in the Replacement Center to Panama for hard-labor service detachments. Polish your brass and you might make acting corporal before the war's over."

"Oh, it's lovely to run into an old top sergeant who can't put you on kitchen police when you sass back at him."

"You're a sweet little lad, Hargrove," he purred. "We really do miss you here. When you were here, I never had to worry about where I was going to get another man when there was a stovepipe to be cleaned or a street to be swept. Now I have to go and search around—search, mind you—for someone who's been a bad little boy. Never had that trouble when you were here."

"Sergeant," I told him, propping my feet on his wastebasket, "you never miss the water until it's gone under the bridge. This battery owes a lot to me. Look out there at that grass growing in front of the orderly room. That grass wouldn't be there—much less be that green—if I hadn't spent time and labor sprinkling it with fertilizer. And think how much cleaner the windows were when I was here to wash every one of them every week. I'll bet you haven't had a clean floor in the battery since I laid down my mop."

"How's sergeant Ooton making out with his grocery budget?" I asked. "Trying to feed you on forty-two cents a day? The last time I saw him, he was working out plans to feed you on Buncombe County turnip greens or pay you to eat at the Service Club."

"Oh, that," he said. "I've saved so much on cigarettes since you left the battery that I could afford to eat uptown now if I wanted to. And let's leave any remarks about Buncombe County out of this. And let's leave your feet out of my wastebasket."

From now on I must deny myself one of the fundamental rights and joys of mankind. I must quit burning matches from those near and dear to me—that is, if I want them to remain near and dear to me. Whenever I ask anyone around Center Headquarters—even Mulvehill or Bishop or Bushemi—for a match, I get one of two answers, both of which are getting very tiresome by now. I hear either "What's the matter? Has your fire gone out?" or "Just light your cigarette on one of our conflagrations; there should be a small arson in yonder corner."

Since I am a patient and long-suffering child, I make no scathing remarks in return for these jaded witticisms. I merely shrug my frail shoulders pathetically and seek greener pastures. It isn't so bad, their refusing the match. The worst part of it is the reminder of an incident which might well be forgotten. The incident is of no consequence, but it might as well come off my chest.

Being a slave to the despoiler of human health and well-being, the cigarette, I still have a fondness for an occasional switch to a pipe. I don't especially enjoy the taste of pipe tobacco, and I don't believe even the most avid pipe smoker especially cares for it. Most of them like me, merely like the feel of a pipe in their mouths and the dignity and solemnity a pipe gives them when they punctuate their conversations by jabbing the air with it.

Smoking a pipe only occasionally, I still have not become overly proficient at keeping the little things burning. When I buy a can of tobacco, I buy a five-cent box of country matches with it. Half my smoke is tobacco; the other half is Georgia pine smoke from the matchsticks.

I was busy today typing out a story, and I had lit my pipe for about the twenty-second time. I threw the match into the wastebasket and forgot all about the whole thing. I was absorbed in my work.

I noticed by degrees that our office was becoming lighter and warmer. I noted the fact with a rich feeling of comfort, but no great interest in finding out the cause. It wasn't until I reached for another match to light that pipe again that I noticed my wastebasket. The thing had in it a cheerful little blaze bright enough to take action photographs on a moonless night.

There was nothing to get excited about, I told the remainder of the public relations staff, the sergeant major's corps of assistants, and the filing department. I nonchalantly put my foot into the basket and started stamping out the fire. The thing would have worked, too, except that the length of my foot was greater than the diameter of the wastebasket. The foot stuck and I could not stamp.

Corporal Sager, of Plans and Training, leaped to the rescue, pried the foot from the basket, grabbed the basket and sped away to the water cooler. I followed him and poured myself a cup of water. I still saw no cause for excitement.

To the bystanders' catcalls, unseemly laughter, and accusations of arson, I turned a fatherly ear and a quieting voice. I explained patiently that setting fire to wastebaskets was an ancient and honored pastime in the newspaper world. I told them that one of the best newspaper men North Carolina has ever seen—"Uncle John" Dickson, former city editor of the News—used to set his wastebasket on fire at least twice a week by tossing cigarettes or burning matches into it. It was a mark of certain industry, a sign that a man was wrapped up in his work.

Maury Sher, my old buddy when we were together in the student cooks' battery, had been on an extended furlough. Before he returned, I had left on a three-day pass for Charlotte. We had not got together for two or three weeks, so I went over to his battery to look him up.

The battery street was almost empty; the mess-hall door was locked. The mess sergeant was nowhere to be seen. Finally I found a soldier who had seen Sergeant Sher in his room, so I looked for him there.

The sergeant lay on his lazy back on a stilted bunk in his cadre room, reading Dorothy Parker. The windows of the room had been equipped with flimsy green curtains, and partially deflated holiday balloons fluttered against them. On the wall above the bed hung a small oil painting of a forest, with an icy white mountain in the background. A writing table had been installed and on a shelf in over his bunk were a reading lamp, a small radio, and a neat array of books.

I stood there surveying the place for a while. "What in the sweet name of military hardship have you got here?" I asked him. "All this place needs is a couple of Morris chairs and a sign reading, 'What is home without a mother?' "

"Beginning to look nice, ain't it?" he said. "Just a few minor improvements here and there. Know where I can pick up a small upright piano at a good price?"

I looked over the room again and my eye fell on the resplendent forest scene. "Where'd you get this canvas knickknack? It's an original, isn't it?"

"It ain't nothing else but," he said. "Painted by a friend of mine up in Columbus. Guy knocks them off like that in about twenty minutes. How do you like it?"

Aside from the fact that the waterfall is a little frothy and the mountain looks like something from a mentholatum advertisement, it would do credit to any mess sergeant's room in the whole Replacement Center."

"You didn't notice this," he said, lifting himself lazily from the bunk. From the table he took an ordinary-looking beer can with an extra lid on it. "John Bull Beer," he said. "Can't buy it anywhere except in my family's restaurant in Ohio and Pennsylvania."

He lifted the top lid, revealing a businesslike cigarette lighter. I took the can, struck the flint and a roaring blaze leaped at me. It burned merrily away.

"Not bad, huh? Good advertising scheme."

"It should come in handy," I told him, "anytime the furnace goes blah. That little conflagration would heat a whole barracks in three minutes flat."

He twisted the dial of his radio and a high-pitched feminine wail bounced off the far wall. "I've been listening to the opera most of the afternoon—The Magic Flute."

"What happened to the magic skillet?" I asked. "How come you're lying around here instead of bustling about your kitchen—tickling the pal-

"Have you any last words before I pass KP on you?" the sergeant asked.

ates of the men with your culinary delights, as they say in the Army cooks' manual?"

"No supper tonight," he explained airily. "We're just changing cycles and there ain't nobody here but the noncommissioned officers, like myself. I told them to go and eat next door.

"This is the life, little man." He yawned. "Nothing to do, nothing to worry about. Just lie around, read and listen to the opera. Sans soucl, as we French say—without care."

The first sergeant looked over his glasses with a rather unpleasant gleam in his eyes. He glanced significantly at the top of my head, so I removed my cap. The first sergeant adjusted himself in his chair and cleared his throat.

"Private Hargrove," he began slowly and deliberately, "the government of the United States, to whom no task seems impossible, has tackled the job of pulling you a little out the way out of your abysmal ignorance. With complete faith that heaven will help them in this job, they have begun a series of lectures about why you are being trained to fight, whom you are being trained to fight, and all the other little things you should know."

"Yes, sir," I said hesitantly, running my finger around the inside of my collar. "You mean the radio lectures on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons."

"From four until four-thirty," the first sergeant said. "The entire population has been invited by Upstairs to gather in the mess halls to hear and discuss these lectures. Yesterday afternoon you weren't on hand. Have you any last words before I pass KP on to you?"

"It's a rather long story, sergeant," I began.

"Here we go again," sighed the sergeant. "Have a chair and begin breaking my heart. It will make you feel better to have that off your chest before you go to the kitchen."

"Sergeant," I asked him, "were you ever editor of a high-school newspaper?"

"Is this long story about me or you?" the sergeant asked. "Please continue with your story."

"Well, sir," I continued, "only a high-school editor could know the pain that is in my heart. Only he could sympathize with me. I have gone back to my old job I had years ago. I am again a true high-school editor. I am editor of the Replacement Center section of the Fort Bragg Post."

"Meeting such a dignitary is one of the greatest occasions of my life," the first sergeant said dryly.

BIBLE TEACHINGS ON ABSTINENCE

(International Temperance Sunday)

LESSON TEXT—Leviticus 10:1, 2, 8-11; Proverbs 31:4, 5; Luke 1:15-16.

GOLDEN TEXT—Beware, I pray thee, and drink no wine nor strong drink.—Judges 13:4.

Total abstinence from all alcoholic liquors is the only sensible and effective policy for Christian people. Some, who want to use alcohol themselves, like to stress the Bible's teaching of temperance. They point to the use of wine on the part of people in biblical times, although they fail to note that more often than not it was non-alcoholic. (See "The Bible and Wine," published by Loizeaux Brothers.)

Another thing they ignore is that we live in a different day with a mechanized society, when alcoholic beverages are offered through high pressure advertising and in highly distilled and potent form.

What we are most interested in is what the Bible teaches about the matter. We note that—

Abstinence is Necessary

I. For Spiritual Obedience (Lev. 10:1-2, 8-11).

In the religious life of a nation one expects the leaders to set the example for the people to follow. Two things we may rightly demand of those who serve the nation in its religious life: (1) a vision of God and obedience to that vision in life and service, and (2) the exercise of sound, God-guided judgment in the affairs of the people.

But note what happens when the prophet and the priest turn to wine and strong drink. They err in vision (Isa. 28:7). That is, they have no clear concepts of divine truth, and lead the people into error. Further, we see that "they stumble in judgment."

To every true servant of God comes repeatedly the opportunity and the need of rendering judgment, that is, of advising and counseling those to whom he ministers. If his mind is befuddled by the use of alcohol (or, for that matter, by any other kind of worldly indulgence) he will "stumble," and cause his people to stumble.

A sad incident is related in Leviticus 10:1, 2, of the sons of Aaron. We are not told directly that they were intoxicated, but it is implied in the fact that there is an immediate injunction against the use of wine by the priests (Lev. 10:8-11).

II. For National Order (Prov. 31: 4, 5).

It is a notorious fact that the liquor interests strongly influence the political life of a nation. (See "The Wrecking of the 18th Amendment," by Ernest Gordon.)

While political leaders may make sanctimonious protestation that government agencies are not influenced by the liquor interests, it is common knowledge even to those who are slightly informed that the two are closely associated.

The result of that unholy alliance is rightly described in Proverbs 31:5 —"They . . . forget the law, and pervert the judgment of any of the afflicted." Much of the sad disorder in the body politic is traceable directly to the door of the makers and sellers of alcoholic beverages.

It is a depressing and disturbing thing when the leaders of a nation are known to lean on alcoholic stimulants—the broken reed on which man can only be pierced. The destructive influence of their example can be imagined.

III. For Personal Usefulness (Luke 11:13-16).

John was to be born into a life of such blessed usefulness to God and man that he was to be a "joy and gladness" to his parents, "great in the sight of the Lord," and instrumental in turning "many of the children of Israel . . . to the Lord."

Such a life is worthy of emulation on the part of every young man and woman. What is the secret of it? Undoubtedly, fine Christian parentage had much to do with it.

Other elements also entered in, such as rearing and training, but of great importance was the fact (v. 15) that he was not to be driven by the false stimulants of this world, but by the infilling of the Holy Spirit of God. No "wine nor strong drink," but being "filled with the Holy Ghost"—there, young people, is the secret of a happy and useful life.

Note that John was to be "great in the sight of the Lord" (v. 15)—nothing finer or more distinctive could be said about a man. That greatness simply could not exist along with indulgence in "wine nor strong drink." Being filled with the Spirit precludes the use of intoxicants.

Let us bear that in mind when we are tempted to be led astray by the smooth arguments of those who talk "temperance" as a ground for indulgence. Our boys and girls—yes, our men and women—need a constant warning against the evils of alcoholic liquor. (See Alcohol, a Deceiver, Depraver and Destroyer, published by Moody Press, Chicago.)

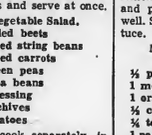
Salads Belong in Autumn Menus
(See Recipes Below.)

Salads for Fall

Is a salad an integral part of your diet or do you set it aside just for summer months when vegetables are easy to obtain and serve in salad form?

Food authorities and doctors have long recommended the use of raw fruits and vegetables in the diet not only to guarantee more vitamins and minerals to the dietary, but to give the necessary roughage to the system. Vegetables contain a great deal of cellulose and are not as easily digested as the softer foods. This means they aid in proper function and elimination and belong daily in every diet.

Although we are limited in the amount of fresh vegetables obtainable in the fall and winter months, there are some available which offer many possibilities for salads. Cabbage, carrots, citrus fruits and apples are the most common. For a more substantial salad item, use cottage cheese. It will also give you a goodly amount of calcium, needed for proper bone and tooth development.



If your family has been shrunk by the call here are two recipes especially designed for smaller families:

Tomatoes Stuffed With Green Pepper Slaw.
(Serves 2)

Cut a thin slice from the stem end of each tomato. Remove seeds and part of the pulp. Sprinkle inside with salt. Invert and chill. Fill with finely shredded cabbage combined with green pepper, moistened with a dressing made of 4 tablespoons sweet cream, 2 teaspoons sugar, ½ teaspoon salt and 2 tablespoons vinegar.

Green Bean Salad.
(Serves 2)

Place green stringless beans, cooked and chilled in individual lettuce cups. Combine 1 tablespoon vinegar, ¼ teaspoon salt and pepper to taste. Beat with egg beater or shake in a jar until well blended. Mash 3 tablespoons Roquefort cheese and then add oil and vinegar mixture slowly, stirring until very smooth. Pour over beans and serve at once.

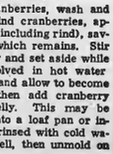
Surprise Vegetable Salad.
Sliced boiled beets
Sliced boiled string beans
Sliced boiled carrots
Boiled green peas
Boiled lima beans
French dressing
Chopped chives
Boiled potatoes

Prepare and cook separstely, in the usual manner, an equal quantity of all the vegetables mentioned in recipe. Boil potatoes with their jackets, peel while still warm and marinate in french dressing while still warm. When ready to serve vegetables, have them well chilled and arrange in layers in a large salad bowl, starting with beets at the bottom, followed by lima beans, then string beans, next with carrots, followed by peas. When all vegetables are used, pour over them a tart, well-seasoned french dressing. Cover the whole with a layer of potatoes, being sure that all the peas are covered. Sprinkle top with fresh, chopped chives and serve.

Greens, be they lettuce, romaine, chicory or escarole, need little else but a dressing for they are perfectly delicious just so and a splendid course for a heavy type of dinner:

Salad With Egg Dressing.
(Serves 6)

2 heads of lettuce
4 hard-boiled eggs
⅓ cup cream
¼ cup lemon juice or cider vinegar
Salt and pepper
Prepared mustard



Wash lettuce carefully and dry thoroughly. Put the yolks of the eggs through a ricer and let them drop to the bottom of a well-chilled salad bowl. Add a little prepared mustard and stir with a wooden spoon, adding the cream gradually. Season to taste with the salt and pepper, then add lemon juice and vinegar. Add the lettuce, toss lightly and sprinkle the chopped whites of egg over all. Serve on cold plates.

The use of cottage cheese with salads gives them a heartiness which is particularly necessary in the cooler weather. Here is a well-seasoned salad, pretty and colorful:

Apple, Carrot, Cottage Cheese Salad
(Serves 6)

3 apples, coarsely diced
2 cups shredded raw carrot
1 tablespoon onion, finely minced
1 cup cottage cheese
¼ cup mayonnaise
2 tablespoons lemon juice
¾ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper

Dice unpeeled apples and combine with grated carrot and onion. Add the cottage cheese blended with mayonnaise, lemon juice, salt and pepper. Mix well. Serve on lettuce.

Molded Cranberry Salad.
(Serves 8 to 10)

½ pound cranberries
1 medium-sized apple, unpeeled
1 orange and rind
½ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
1 package orange-flavored gelatin
1 cup hot water
½ cup cold water
½ cup chopped celery

Pick over cranberries, wash and drain well. Grind cranberries, apple and orange (including rind), saving any liquid which remains. Stir in sugar. Cover and set aside while gelatin is dissolved in hot water Add cold water and allow to become partly jellied, then add cranberry mixture and jelly. This may be poured either into a loaf pan or individual molds rinsed with cold water. Allow to jell, then unmold on lettuce.

Sandwich Fillings

Don't forget that raw vegetables with all their good vitamins and minerals are wonderful as sandwich fillings. Grind raw spinach leaves with crisp bacon, hard-cooked egg, onion, moistened with mayonnaise. Or, combine equal parts of raw carrot and turnip and mix with chopped chives, peanuts and mayonnaise. This is good on French bread.

Lynn Says:

Salad Notes: Ingredients for a salad should be large enough to retain their identity. It's not a good idea to hide a vegetable the family does not like by chopping it very fine. Shred, but do not chop vegetables.

Simplest salads are the most attractive. A salad should taste as good as it looks.

Toss ingredients lightly, never stir ambitiously. Dressing need not cover every piece. Salad greens should always be clean, crisp, fresh.

Drain all vegetables thoroughly, before using. Serve them on clean, well-chilled plates, as cold as possible.

Vary salads from day to day. Try new combinations of color, vegetables and fruit.

ON THE HOME FRONT

RUTH WYETH SPEARS

IT ALL started with a bright idea for making a painted coffee table out of odds and ends of lumber. The sketch gives dimensions and shows the simple construction used to make the frame reinforced by useful shelves at the ends. So far the table was substantial but crude and that is where the lady with the needle came in.

The table was to be painted cream color and then waxed. She bought a yard of slightly darker tan sateen and appliqued a design of blue and red morning glories with green leaves on it. This was placed over the top of the table and tacked around the edge. A piece of glass was cut to fit and the finishing boards were then screwed around the sides. Any interesting fabric could be used under the glass of the table top, or bright flower prints or a map would give a good effect.

SNAPPY FACTS ABOUT RUBBER

In the 45 years between 1889 and 1934, the output of rubber produced by the Far East plantations jumped from half a ton to 98 per cent of the world's supply — 1934 shipments were 1,000,000 tons. The first official record, that for 1899, shows that four tons of rubber were produced from 4000 acres under cultivation.

The greatest enemies to the long life of natural rubber are sunlight, heat, oils, greases and solvents. The ultra-violet rays of the sun penetrate the surface of rubber, causing it to oxidize; heat causes deterioration, and oils develop swelling and softening, making the rubber more susceptible to damage.
